For most of his 27 years in the Senate, Leahy has been less a legislative heavyweight than a spokesman for the NPR set, a champion of liberal causes like expanding political asylum, death sentence reviews, and ending the travel ban on Cuba. When the Senate gave nonbinding approval to missile defense in 1999, Leahy cast one of just three dissenting votes. Throughout the 1990s he pushed, in opposition to the Clinton administration, for a global treaty outlawing land mines. And Leahy was among the Senate's bluntest critics of the Supreme Court after its Bush v. Gore decision, fuming, "Their credibility ... and their moral posture is so diminished, it will take years to repair."

All that changed in May, when the defection of his fellow Vermonter, Jim Jeffords, tipped the Senate to Democratic control. Delaware Senator Joe Biden was next in line to chair the Judiciary Committee, but instead chose to take over Foreign Relations. And so, Leahy suddenly had a powerful perch. Liberal interest groups were thrilled. But on Capitol Hill the reaction was less effusive. Some Democrats considered Leahy to be fairly pleasant, someone with "a real low-key affability," as one party operative puts it. But many others

him prickly and arrogant. "He always had a much higher view of himself than anyone else," says a former top aide to another liberal Senate Democrat who remembers his boss disliking Leahy despite their ideological kinship.

And, as feared, Leahy hasn't made many friends during his short tenure as chairman. Even by the testy standards of judicial nominations, Republicans have reacted viscerally to his stewardship. On one level, the complaints are hard to take too seriously. Though The Wall Street Journal editorial page has attacked him for "unprecedented stonewalling on judges," Leahy has treated nominees no worse than Republicans treated Clinton's. A Democratic operative notes that Leahy has an "extraordinarily difficult" job as Judiciary chairman and should be given some slack. But GOP senators insist Leahy has made the process unusually personal. According to a Senate Republican aide, after Idaho Republican Larry Craig criticized Leahy in the media, Leahy told him that one of his home-state judges would have to wait until next year for a hearing. The aide also says Leahy warned Charles Grassley of Iowa that if he signed a letter of grievance circulating among Republican Judiciary Committee members, his judges' scheduled hearings would be canceled. (Aides to the senators didn't respond, and a Leahy staffer says he doesn't know anything about the charges.) Meanwhile, Colorado's two GOP Senators, Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell, told Roll Call last month that Leahy implied their support for a GOP filibuster--protesting stalled nominations--would affect the fate of their judges. (A Leahy aide told me that anyone familiar with the senator's dry wit would understand that he was kidding.) As a result, Leahy has become the subject of profane denunciations by Republican senators during their weekly policy lunches, according to one attendee. Adds a top Republican aide, "They are taking his actions personally because it seems to be the way he operates."

Such accusations would be easier to dismiss as partisan sniping if members of Leahy's own party weren't grousing as well. Democratic staffers are still buzzing, for instance, about Leahy's harsh treatment of California Democrat Dianne Feinstein at a September 13 Judiciary hearing on a Justice Department authorization bill. Feinstein wanted to introduce an amendment adding several new judicial slots for California's Southern District Court, where she argued backlogs had created a state of "crisis." She'd tried for months to add the judges, Feinstein pleaded, without avail. "I don't do this lightly," a transcript shows her saying. "I obviously don't like to annoy my chairman. I have tried and I have tried and I have tried, and now I fight."

"Don't speak of annoyance," Leahy snapped. "This is not a time to be personal on these things." Leahy then patronizingly suggested that Feinstein "may not have understood" an earlier promise he made to pass the measure if she would hold off for now. "I was told you would not approve that," Feinstein fired back, "and I would be 'Rule Sixteened'"--i.e., shot down. Several other senators--including the liberal Democrat Dick Durbin--rose to Feinstein's defense. Growing ever more irritated, Leahy turned "beet red," according to an aide, and snapped at Feinstein for talking to her staff while he was speaking. The two senators finally retreated to a private anteroom, from which they could be heard yelling at each other. By the end of the exchange, witnesses say, Feinstein was practically in tears.

Multiple people to whom I related this story replied that anyone who so upsets Dianne Feinstein--less than a fan favorite herself--must be doing something right. And a Leahy aide notes that Feinstein's amendment was added to the bill a few weeks later. But others say that Leahy's response to this mild insubordination was typical. "He'll blow up at you," says a basically sympathetic observer. "Even if you don't make it personal, he'll take it personally."

nd Leahy's prickliness is starting to have national policy ramifications. Consider what happened during negotiations last month over emergency anti-terrorism legislation. At the outset, the Bush administration was confident it would get enhanced law enforcement authority from the GOP-controlled House. It was Leahy and the Democratic-controlled Senate they worried about. After all, last year Leahy, a former prosecutor deeply wary of broad law enforcement powers, almost single-handedly sank a similar anti-terrorism bill crafted by Feinstein and Arizona Republican Jon Kyl (See "Sin of Commission," by Franklin Foer, October 8). And the September 11 attacks appeared to do little to change his mind. When Attorney General John Ashcroft asked Congress for swift passage of expanded wiretapping, detention, and evidence-sharing powers, Leahy insisted on opening up detailed negotiations with Justice Department and White House officials before advancing a bill out of his committee.

Few people objected to such consultation. But Leahy proceeded to alienate his colleagues by limiting the talks to a narrow circle consisting of himself, Ted Kennedy, ranking Judiciary Republican Orrin Hatch, and Justice Department officials. When other Judiciary Committee senators-- primarily Feinstein and New York's Chuck Schumer-- suggested changes, Leahy and his famously thorny chief counsel, Bruce Cohen, closed ranks further, implying that the negotiations were his responsibility alone. "I think it was a mistake to go ahead with that view of the world," says one civil liberties lobbyist.

And, in a sad irony, Leahy's insularity appears to have made the bill less protective of civil liberties. Had Leahy been more open to working with his fellow senators, some observers say, he might have had enough support in his committee to alter the bill more to his liking. Instead he went it largely solo.

At an October 2 press conference, Ashcroft, joined by Hatch and Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, implied that Leahy was stalling the legislation and leaving the public "susceptible" to more attacks. It was a startlingly partisan move--and one that appalled Leahy, who accuses the White House of shifting its own time-consuming delays--but it worked. Without allies on his committee, and quite likely under pressure from Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, who was concerned about the Democrats looking weak on terrorism, Leahy was forced to cave, according to observers.

The outcome: The Senate, as The Wall Street Journal put it, "produced a bill whose vast expansion of law-enforcement powers delivers almost everything the Bush administration sought." In the House, by contrast, a coalition of ACLU liberals and anti-government conservatives succeeded in adding a sunset provision phasing out expanded wiretap authority after five years, along with other restraints. (The final bill includes a four-year sunset.)

Leahy takes credit for slowing down and restraining Ashcroft's original plan. But the anti-terrorism fight clearly left a sour taste in his mouth. At an October 25 press conference celebrating Senate passage of the final bill, he wore the sullen frown of a sore loser. Even as the C-SPAN cameras rolled, he couldn't resist scowling and bickering with Hatch. Things got so touchy that Lott had to step in and defuse the tension with a joke about what a "magnificent achievement" it was getting the two to agree.

But then, despite his Deadhead tastes, Leahy has never pretended to be all sunshine and flowers. Indeed, when he emerged from the 1997 premiere of Batman & Robin, Leahy complained that the movie presented too cheery a vision of a superhero who was, after all, first conceived as an obsessed loner seeking vengeance for his parents' deaths. "I'd love to get back to the dark side," Leahy told The Hill. In his own work, at least, he seems to be succeeding.

This database is fine.

As to ethnicity, in a perfect world, no one would keep track, but the census asks for it, the media/public asks about it, Congress asks about it, interest groups ask about it. It is incumbent upon the Administration to be able to respond to inquiries along these lines about the President's appointees. There is no legal problem whatever with that.

As to party affiliation, that is acceptable for political appointee positions for reasons you suggest -- and others. Again, no legal problem.

Do not keep any database that references political contributions.

Subject: OPA database for boards and commissions

Brett: We are working closely with PPO to identify qualified folks to serve on presidential boards and commissions (of which there are hundreds of slots that will be opening during the course of the administration). We have collected names and resumes of supporters who we would like to recommend to PPO to serve on these boards and are trying to create a better database through which we can match people with available openings. The technical guys in the NEOB have helped us build a File Maker Pro database, but are now balking b/c of some of the information we would like to include (specifically party affiliation and ethnicity) and have asked that we get a read from you all before proceeding.

The reason that we want to collect and track this info is that, in addition to requiring people to be of certain professions and have particular backgrounds, some of the boards and commissions by statute require members be of one party or another. And having diverse representation on these is obviously a goal of the administration. For us to be able to effectively match people to these requirements, we need a database that allows us to track this information on people.

Note that all of this information that we are collecting comes to us via Bush leadership in the states for the specific reason of matching these people with appropriate boards and commissions. We are not using any of the data that people have submitted via the on-line application system to PPO.

Do you think we're on safe ground proceeding w/ the database? We'll need you guys to bless it in order to proceed. If you need more specifics or have questions, let me know.

Thanks very much. Paul

In Case You Missed It...

- "Liberating it [Afghanistan] from this evil Taliban will only be good for women, men and children. It is a very good war of liberation. The Americans aren't like the Soviet Union, they are not trying to overthrow Muslims for communists. They are helping the Afghans to progress and saving poor Muslims from evil." (The Amir of Bahrain, 11/13/01)

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- "Small crowds of Kabul residents lined the streets in the north of the city to cheer the arrival of the Northern Alliance forces…they chanted "Allah o Akhbar (God is Great)." (AFP, 11/13/01)
- "The Taliban were also accused of looting as they retreated from Mazar. UNICEF officials said they had taken all the organization's vehicles and communications equipment and its offices had been robbed of computers, furniture and radio equipment." (The Independent [U.K.], 11/13/01)
- "Among the accounts of mutilations, beatings and arbitrary executions there was evidence of a new abomination: the torture of children. An unknown number of infants were savagely beaten during the [Taliban] Islamic militia's 14-month occupation of Taloqan, the former headquarters of the [Northern] Alliance, usually for the supposed crimes of their parents." (The Times [U.K.], 11/13/01)
- "The BBC has confirmed that the central Afghan town of Bamiyan was totally destroyed by the Taliban before they fled over the weekend. Evidence has also emerged of Bosnian-style ethnic cleansing in the region involving the execution of hundreds of local ethnic Hazara men." (BBC, 11/13/01)

Message

- The fall of key cities in Afghanistan to anti-Taliban forces advances our objectives of eliminating the Al-Qaida terrorist organization and breaking the Taliban hold on Afghanistan.
- The positive reception of the anti-Taliban forces as liberators is a clear indication that the people of Afghanistan are ready to throw off the oppressive yoke of the Taliban and the Al-Qaida foreigners.
- We look forward to the opening of a corridor from these liberated areas to the borders with Uzbekistan and Tajikistan. This will open up Afghanistan to expanded delivery of humanitarian assistance and reconstruction supplies. In particular, the Friendship Bridge between Uzbekistan and Afghanistan will be cleared of mines and made safe for the passage of these supplies. It will become a "Food Bridge" to feed suffering people.
- This will further reduce the suffering of the Afghan people and show the rest of Afghanistan that life for the entire nation will be better once the Taliban have been removed from power.
- The advance of the anti-Taliban forces has been assisted by defections from disillusioned supporters. It is time for the rest of Afghanistan -- particularly the ethnic groups in the south -- to join the uprising against the Taliban and throw off their oppressive rule. The sooner they act, the greater the benefit.
- The structure of post-Taliban Afghanistan will be for the Afghan people to determine. But we will provide strong diplomatic and economic support to the aspirations of Afghan parties committed to an inclusive, democratic political structure, committed to the welfare of all Afghan men and women, and providing substantial local autonomy. This is a structure in which all Afghan ethnic groups can participate and find their rightful place.

Facts of the Day

- From 11/1-12, the World Food Program delivered 27,000 metric tons of food to Afghanistan. Of that, 18,000 metric tons was sent to Kabul and the Central Highlands.
- To date, the U.S. has airdropped 1,454,820 Humanitarian Daily Rations valued at $6,255,726.

Seems to me we need to get together with Rachel in WH Counsel's office -- and then with our leg folks -- and then perhaps with Ben Cohen in House policy shop. There apparently are many different tracks, and we need to get everyone here and HHS on one page. First thing that would be useful is a briefing from Rachel, who has been working bioterrorism bills -- on which this vaccine issue has arisen. How is Wednesday at 5:00 in Rachel's office?

MEMORANDUM FOR DIANA FURCHTGOTT-ROTH AND JOHN ACKERLY

FROM: PETER FEATHER

SUBJECT: SMALLPOX VACCINE

Presently there are 15.4 million doses of smallpox vaccine maintained by the Government. An additional 40 million more doses have been contracted to be produced. Health risks associated with the present vaccine are thought to be similar to risks associated with smallpox vaccines administered in the past. The potential liabilities faced by a manufacturer for resulting fatalities, disabilities and hospitalizations are significant. Several options exist to mitigate these liabilities:

Options for Insuring Vaccine Manufacturers

1. Direct Government Indemnification: The Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) has drafted a proposed executive order amending Executive Order 10789. This authorizes government agencies to enter into indemnification agreements with contractors engaged in unusually hazardous activities relating to national defense functions

2. Transfer Liability to the Government: The National Swine Flu Immunization Program of 1976 made a suit against the United States under the Federal Tort Claims Act to be the sole remedy for claims arising from adverse reactions to the swine flu vaccine. Such an approach could be used for smallpox vaccine to protect manufacturers. This requires an act of Congress.

3. Government Insurance Reimbursement: Under the Federal Acquisition Regulation, the Government may reimburse contractors for the cost of acquiring liability insurance. In some circumstances, the Government may require contractors to carry liability insurance, which is factored into their bids. This option does not require legislation, but may significantly increase the cost of a vaccine.

4. Vaccine Compensation Funds. Congress enacted the National Vaccine Injury Compensation Program (VICP) as a no-fault alternative to the tort system for resolving claims resulting from adverse reactions to mandated childhood vaccines. A tax ($0.75 per antigen) is levied on vaccines and held in a fund to be used for damages. Awards include economic costs, pain and suffering, estimated costs of future care and attorney fees. A similar program could be established for smallpox vaccine if it were sold on the open market. Congress has to create the surcharge, so for smallpox vaccine to be added to the VICP program, an act of Congress would be required.

5. Extension of Executive Order: PLE-5804 grants indemnity to military contractors if they produce equipment according to contract specifications. Under Boyle vs United Technologies Corp (487 U.S. 500, 1988), liability design defects cannot be imposed where 1. The government provided reasonable precise specifications; 2. The product conformed to specifications; 3. The supplier warned about dangers in the case of the product of which it (but not the government) was aware. Its possible, but not known, that this precedent extends to vaccines produced under government contract.

Potential Liabilities

The health risks associated with smallpox vaccine are well documented. Data from vaccination programs in the 1960's show the following frequencies of adverse reactions.

a. Fatalities: 0.5-2.5 per million
b. Disability: 0.25-1.5 per million
c. Hospitalization: 15-30 per million
d. Medical Attended: 875 per million

It is difficult to accurately estimate the expected liability vaccine manufacturers are exposed to. Persons with compromised immune systems are at greater risk to adverse reactions. The U.S. population has significantly more of these individuals now than in the 1960's. On the other hand, persons with previous exposure to the vaccine are at less risk. Approximately half of the population of the U.S. is at least 35 years of age or older and has probably been exposed to the vaccine. It is believed that the additional risks from persons with compromised immune systems far outweigh the reductions in risk to previous exposure. The numbers above express these differences in the population from the 1960's to the present. The higher risk estimates are believed to be more likely to apply to the present U.S. population.

Damages paid by the VICP program (option 4 above) include economic costs, pain and suffering, estimated costs of future care and attorney fees. Awards have ranged from $120.00 to $7.9 million. The average injury award since the inception of the VICP for both Pre-1988 and Post-1988 claims is $822,045. Awards for death cases are capped at $250,000 plus attorneys' fees/costs.

Industry Estimate

Acambis Incorporated has contracted with the Government to produce 40 million doses of smallpox vaccine. The contract specifies that Acambis acquire $225 million of insurance for liabilities associated with the development, testing and potential utilization of the vaccine. Acambis identified three risks that would result in potential liability. Based on settlement information from previous lawsuits involving similar injuries, Acambis estimates the following liabilities[1]:

[1] The CDC supplied this confidential information. It should not be made public.

1. Non-fatal Encephalpathies: Estimated frequency is 4.55 cases per million, or 182 cases per 40 million doses. Average liability is estimated to be $3 million per case (350 verdicts were examined with settlements ranging from $17,000 to $45 million – extreme settlements were discarded). Total liability is $546 million.
2. Non-fatal Scarring: Estimated frequency is 0.525 cases per million, or 21 cases per 40 million doses. Average liability is estimated to be $0.4 million per case (600 verdicts of similar injuries were examined ranging from $2,000 to $20 million – extreme settlements were discarded). Total liability is $8.4 million.
3. Death: Estimated frequency is 6.625 cases per million, or 265 cases per 40 million doses. Average liability is estimated to be $0.76 million per case (This is based on the present value of future earnings, a low estimate for the value of life. EPA, for example, uses $6.2 million). Total liability is $202 million.

Total estimated liability is $756.3 million -- approximately triple the insurance coverage. Instead of acquiring more insurance, Acambis advocates the use of consent forms at the time of innoculation to reduce liability risks. They also discuss the applicability of the Government contracts executive order (5 above).

MEMORANDUM FOR: DIANA FURCHTGOTT-ROTH

FROM: PETER FEATHER

SUBJECT: TORT LIABILITY AND TERRORISM

Introduction

The American civil liability system cost $161 billion in 1999, or 2 percent of the nation's gross domestic product, compared with 1.4 percent in 1970, and 0.6 percent in 1950. Breaking down tort costs, 24% go to litigants for their actual (economic) losses, and 22% to compensate for pain and suffering, 30% for lawyers fees and defense costs and 24% for administrative costs. Only 3 percent of liability claims are settled by court verdict. However, lawsuit verdicts have a disproportionate impact on liability costs because they influence the damage amount sought by plaintiffs and the size of out-of-court settlement.

Higher product prices, medical costs and insurance rates pay for the tort system. For example, it has been estimated that 55% of the price of a football helmet and 30% of the price of a stepladder are attributable to litigation risk cost. The extra cost imposed by liability costs from insurance on childhood vaccines accounts for 95% of the price. Studies have shown that physicians may prescribe unnecessary precautionary treatments, (referred to as "defensive medicine"), or avoid those they perceive as risky (referred to as "non-defensive medicine") in order to avoid non-financial litigation penalties such as harm to their reputations and the time and stress associated with a malpractice suit.

The Tort system serves the economically useful purpose of what economists refer to as internalizing externalities. In other words, it makes persons who injure others aware of their actions and act appropriately. If the awards or the expectation of the liability exceeds the actual damage, then too much cost is passed onto consumers and distortions in the economy occur. Although it is nearly impossible to know exactly what defines an excessive award, it is useful to examine trends in awards over time. The levels of jury awards have risen dramatically in this decade. These jury awards are used as precedents in out of court settlements. During a five year period from 1994 to 1999:

1. average death awards have risen from $1.1 million to $5.5 million;
2. average business negligence awards have risen from $0.7 million to $1.7 million;
3. average personal negligence awards have risen from $0.3 million to 3.0 million;
4. average products liability awards have risen from $1.7 million to $7.4 million

The tort system can also be useful in keeping undesirable (usually unsafe) products out of the market place. If the expected harm these products will create (as defined in the tort system) exceeds their benefits, then the tort system serves a useful function. However, if the expectation of liability greatly exceeds the actual harm that will be caused, then (net) beneficial products may be kept out of the market. Economic theory tells us that the resources that would be used to produce these goods will be used to produce the next best alternative. Therefore, the loss is not the value of the good that isn't produced, but rather the difference in the value of the good that isn't produced less the value of the next best alternative. Since only one of these goods is produced, it is difficult to assess this loss. Still, anecdotal evidence suggests that some products that may have a net benefit to society as a whole are withheld from the market place due to excessive concerns of liability from the tort system.

1. Because many lawyers are familiar with asbestos liability theories, Monsanto decided to not release a safe, biodegradable asbestos substitute into the market place over a decade ago. At this date, it has still not been commercially utilized.
2. Concerns over liability have resulted in withdrawals of medicines such as bendectin and thalidomide, and halted the production of vaccines such as smallpox and DPT.

The terrorist attack on September 11 has added to the problem. Insurance companies uncertain how to assess new liability risks are raising premiums and, in some cases, denying coverage. A new survey of insurance agents and brokers reports that businesses across the U.S. are seeing large increases in premiums and more restrictive policy terms. The third quarter survey, conducted by the Council of Insurance Agents and Brokers, indicates that insurance policies covering property damages have some of the largest increases. Approximately 25% of respondents said their customers were paying rates 30%-50% higher than the previous quarter. Some (14%) said their clients face increases of more than 50%. Almost half (44%) of agents and brokers report premium increases of at least 30% in umbrella liability coverage. Although insurance costs were expected to trend upward due to a slowing economy, the September 11 terrorist attacks have probably added to the cost increases.

Several industries have been impacted by higher insurance costs that may force many to either raise prices, or exit the market.

Airlines

Airlines carry insurance for public liability, passenger liability, property damage, and damage to its aircraft. The policies in place before September 11 typically contained limits of liability that are reported by one major insurer to max out at $2 billion. Anything above this level would be left uncovered by an airline's insurance policy. Absent the provisions in the Airline Transport System Stabilization Act, the airlines have a large liability exposure. The New York Times reported September 14, 2001, that "While airlines are insured, William Shernoff, a lawyer in Claremont, Calif., who specializes in litigation against insurance companies, said liability claims could easily exceed the coverage, forcing airlines to pay much of the cost of claims directly."

In the aftermath of September 11, these risks will be incorporated into insurance costs, and therefore be a cost of doing business. Absent resolution of insurance and liability issues, costs of flying will rise. These costs could be significant given the precedents set by recent plane crash awards ranging from $3.5 million per passenger (Swissair Flight 111) to $5.7 million per passenger (Pan Am Flight 103).

Transportation

Many freight carriers cannot afford to pay insurance. Insurance costs have increased 200%-300% in some cases. The American Trucking Association has documented reports of increases as high as 800% -1000% since September 11. Most of the increases are in "umbrella" liability policies. Over the past several years, the number of claims has fallen, but the cost per claim has risen. Fewer companies are willing to insure carriers, which may force some out of the business. It appears that there will be no way to insure against terrorist attacks in the future.

The American Bus Association reports a similar situation. Insurance costs before September 11 were scheduled to rise. Since September 11, they have risen more than expected. On average, premiums have risen 25%-50%, and some as high as 100%. The biggest concern is that insurance companies will refuse to pay for "war risks" or acts of terrorism. Most bus operators are small companies with five or fewer buses. This type of risk will likely drive many out of business

Construction

The Contractor's Association of America reports that Insurance premiums have been trending up in the construction sector, especially in the areas of worker's compensation and liability to the public. The biggest concern in the contracting industry is obtaining insurance in conjunction with the construction of public projects. Presently, insurers will not provide surety bonds unless the contractor has a net worth of at least $50 million. The previous net worth limit was $5 million. This requirement forces all but the largest companies out of the public projects construction sector.

Mail Services

There will be little if any impact on the U.S. Postal Service. The U.S. Postal Service is protected under the Federal Tort Claims Ac and is self-insured. Employee can be compensated exclusively through the Federal Employee Compensation Act. Many mental distress claims are expected, but this legislation makes winning these difficult. Through a discretionary function exemption, the USPS cannot be sued on the grounds of insufficient security.

In the past, United Parcel Service has not been held liable for items they have shipped (e.g., forearms used to commit crimes). They do have a fleet of 240 jet aircraft and are buying FAA act of war insurance. UPS is also experiencing a large insurance cost increases for their vehicle fleet.

November 2, 2001

Dear Chairman Horn:

I have learned that on November 6 the House Subcommittee on Government Efficiency, Financial Management, and Intergovernmental Relations will hold its previously postponed hearing on the Presidential Records Act. In advance of that hearing, we wanted to inform you of a recent development.

President Bush yesterday signed an executive order implementing section 2204(c) of the Presidential Records Act, the provision of the Act that states: "Nothing in this Act shall be construed to confirm, limit, or expand any constitutionally-based privilege which may be available to an incumbent or former President." That statutory provision is necessary, of course, to the Act's constitutionality, for the Supreme Court held in 1977 that both former and current Presidents retain the constitutional right to assert privileges over the records of a former President, including after expiration of a 12-year period of presumptive non-disclosure. See Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, 433 U.S. 425 (1977). Furthermore, Congress contemplated that such constitutional privileges would be available and could be asserted, even after expiration of the 12-year period: At the time the Act was enacted, Senator Percy stated that if a President "believe[d] that the 12-year closure period does not suffice, that President could object to the release of some document in the 13th or 15th or 20th year." Cong. Record S36844 (Oct. 13, 1978).

The Act and its legislative history, as well as the Supreme Court's decision in Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, obviously necessitate procedures for former and current Presidents to review Presidential records of a former President and, if they choose, to assert constitutional privileges. President Bush's order responds to that need by establishing clear and sensible procedures for former and current Presidents to exercise their rights and responsibilities in a timely manner. The order replaces an earlier executive order (Executive Order 12667 of January 18, 1989) that had established some skeletal procedures for assertion of privileges over Presidential records and had provided that the current President would have the primary responsibility for asserting privileges over the records of a former President. President Bush's new order supercedes that prior order both to set forth clearer procedures and to establish, consistent with the Supreme Court's decision in Nixon v. Administrator of General Services and with what the Administration believes to be sound policy and procedure, that former Presidents are to have the primary responsibility for asserting privileges over their records. Indeed, section 4 of President Bush's order, which is its most critical component, provides that the current President will defer, absent compelling circumstances, to the decisions of the former President regarding the former President's records. In sum, therefore, the new executive order grants the current President less relative authority over the records of a former President than did the prior executive order. We believe this point is critical to a proper understanding of the executive order, and has been largely overlooked in public commentary thus far.

In addition, President Bush's order does not purport to guide former Presidents as to their privilege assertions. Section 9 of the order provides that the order does not purport to indicate "whether and under what circumstances a former President should assert or waive any privilege." Indeed, it would have been improper, if not illegal, for President Bush to attempt to limit or override the constitutional rights and privileges of former Presidents -- rights that have been guaranteed by the Supreme Court. But it also bears mention that Section 2 of the order refers to the historical practice before enactment of the Presidential Records Act by which former Presidents, over time, have released a vast majority of their records even though under no legal obligation to do so. We anticipate that this historical practice will continue. At a minimum, contrary to the claims of some commentators, there is no logical basis for assuming that former Presidents will exercise their constitutional and statutory authority to seek withholding of privileged records more aggressively than earlier Presidents -- from President Washington to President Carter -- exercised their plenary and far broader authority to withhold all records.

Finally, you should know that the Administration consulted extensively with the National Archives and Records Administration, the Department of Justice, and former Presidents' representatives before President Bush issued this order. We benefited greatly from that consultation.

Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any questions about the order.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

This is Judge Gonzales' USA Today op-ed that appeared Monday.

President Bush's recent executive order establishes sensible procedures for making public the records of former presidents. The order fulfills the president's statutory obligation to implement the Presidential Records Act, as well as his obligations under a 1977 Supreme Court ruling which held that former presidents continue to have the right to assert privileges over their records even after their term has ended.
Neither President Bush nor Congress has the power or authority to ignore that Supreme Court ruling. President Bush's order therefore allows a former President to assert privileges to protect sensitive documents, such as records that could impact national security. It is clear that virtually all criticism of President Bush's order is actually criticism of the Supreme Court decision guaranteeing the rights of former Presidents to assert privileges over their records.
The Presidential Records Act fails to establish a procedure for former Presidents to assert their constitutionally guaranteed privilege. President Bush's order provides such procedures and sets a reasonable time frame for review of records and assertion of privileges. Importantly, the executive order does not expand or encourage the assertion of any privilege available to the former president.
Under President Bush's order, a large portion of Presidential records, for example those not covered by privilege, will be released no later than 12 years after President's term is over, as established by the Presidential Records Act.
In addition, history has proved that most former Presidents release the vast majority of even their privileged documents. Before the Presidential Records Act took effect in 1981, former Presidents were under no legal obligation to disclose any records, but those who visit the libraries of Presidents Kennedy, Ford or Carter know the valuable array of historical materials that are available. President Bush's executive order preserves this rich tradition.

Tomorrow Larry Lindsey is meeting with Congressman LaFalce regarding insurance. Marc Sumerlin suggested that one of you attend the meeting with Larry and himself. We are still working out the time but believe it will be sometime in the afternoon. Are either of you available to attend. The meeting will be at the Congressman's office in the Rayburn building.

THE WHITE HOUSE
COALITION INFORMATION CENTER

11/16/01

Today's Schedule (EST)

9:30a EST	Deputy Secretary of Defense Wolfowitz to meet the Secretary of National Defense for the Phillipines.
12:30p EST	Daily State Department Press Briefing with Ambassador Rick Boucher.
1:30p EST	Daily Department of Defense Press Briefing by Rear Admiral Stufflebeem.
2:00p EST	Defense Intelligence Agency background briefing on Central Asia.

In Case You Missed It…

"This is no longer the center of terrorism – tell your people that. We are happy to be rid of the Taliban." (Mohamad Ahmad; The Daily Mirror [U.K.], 11/14/01)

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- "Many Kabul residents said seeing the Taliban depart – hastily during the night, with their belongings piled high on trucks – was like having a heavy veil lifted after a long period of darkness." (The Washington Post, 11/14/01)
- "For five years in a two-story house in central Kabul, two sisters secretly taught dozens of girls in defiance of a Taliban edict that said females couldn't go to school…The sisters risked arrest, and beatings, for teaching the girls from old textbooks that they had bought in the bazaar, and for writing on blackboards they had made from two pieces of plywood, painted black and nailed to the wall." (The Los Angeles Times, 11/15/01)
- …[Afghan women] are smiling, and speaking without fear of punishment. It is as if a weight has been lifted off their shoulders and they can breathe again. One woman beckoned me inside her house and kissed me. She was wearing just a scarf. "It is so nice to be able to say hello," she said." (Kate Clark; The Independent [U.K.], 11/15/01)
- "Jamila Mujahid, 40, a radio announcer sacked by the Taliban five years ago, read the first words on Radio Afghanistan — and afterwards she said: 'I thought this time would never come.'" (Sue Evison; The Sun [U.K.], 11/15/01)

Looking Ahead

Tomorrow First Lady Laura Bush will deliver the weekly presidential radio address. The First Lady will kick off a comprehensive effort to focus on the brutality against women and children by the Al-Qaida terrorist network and the regime it supports in Afghanistan – the Taliban.

Message

- Afghan women know, through hard experience, what the rest of the world is discovering: The brutal oppression of women is a central goal of the terrorists.
- Life under the Taliban is so hard and repressive, even small displays of joy are outlawed – children aren't allowed to fly kites; their mothers face beatings for laughing out loud. Women cannot work outside the home, or even leave their homes by themselves.
- The severe repression and brutality against women in Afghanistan is not a matter of legitimate religious practice. Muslims around the world have condemned the brutal degradation of women and children by the Taliban regime.
- Al Qaida and the Taliban in Afghanistan have shown us the world the terrorists would like to impose on the rest of us.
- All of us have an obligation to speak out. We may come from different backgrounds and faiths – but parents the world over love our children. We respect our mothers and sisters and daughters. Fighting brutality against women and children is not the expression of a specific culture; it is the acceptance of our common humanity – a commitment shared by people of good will on every continent.

Facts of the Day

- Since 10/1/01, the United States has provided nearly $120 million in aid to Afghanistan and has supplied more than 80 percent of all food aid to vulnerable Afghans through the U.N. World Food Program. (USAID news release, 11/15/01)
- USAID is providing $5.5 million to the French Humanitarian Organization ACTED, more than half of its operation in Khwaja Bahawudin [Afghanistan], for food, blankets, winter clothing, and shelter for internally displaced persons. USAID is funding similar humanitarian efforts across northern Afghanistan. (USAID news release, 11/15/01)

THE TALIBAN'S WAR AGAINST WOMEN & CHILDREN

HELPING REBUILD THE AFGHAN FAMILY

First Lady Laura Bush will kick off an effort to focus on the brutality against women and children by the al-Qaida terrorist network and the Taliban regime it supports in Afghanistan. That regime is now in retreat across much of the country, and the people of Afghanistan – especially women – are rejoicing. Afghan women know, through hard experience, what the rest of the world is discovering: The brutal oppression of women is a central goal of the terrorists.

LIFE BEFORE THE TALIBAN

Before the Taliban regime took power, Afghan women were protected by law, had important freedoms and were active participants in society:

- In 1977, women comprised over 15 percent of Afghanistan's highest legislative body;
- By the early 1990s women comprised 70 percent of schoolteachers;
- Women made up 50 percent of government workers; and
- 40 percent of doctors in Kabul were women.

Then came the Taliban and their destruction of the family.

LIFE UNDER THE TALIBAN

The Taliban quickly became one of the world's most brutal regimes and leading perpetrators of human rights abuses.

The Taliban regime has especially targeted Afghan women and children, taking away their basic freedoms, splintering their families, putting their lives at risk, and relegating them to poverty. For example, the Taliban:

- Forbid the schooling for girls over the age of eight;
- Shut down the women's university;
- Banned women from working (stripping a society in desperate need of trained professionals of half its assets);
- Restricted access to medical care for women;
- Brutally enforced a restrictive dress code;
- Forbade women from moving about their communities freely.
- Beat women for laughing out loud.

As many as 50,000 widows, have lost husbands and other male relatives in the course of Afghanistan's long civil war. Forbidden from working, they have been forced to sell all of their possessions and beg in the streets, or worse, in order to provide for themselves and their families.

The Taliban's disregard for its people doesn't stop there:

- More than 10 million children in Afghanistan have suffered under years of civil war and drought and now suffer under the repressive Taliban regime.
- One in four Afghan children will not make it to their fifth birthday.
- Afghanistan ranks number one worldwide in maternal mortality.
- One in three Afghan children is an orphan.
- Almost 1/2 of Afghan children suffer chronic malnutrition.

ISLAM RESPECTS WOMEN & CHILDREN

Islam has a tradition of protecting the rights of women and children, and supporting the family.

The Taliban regime has cruelly reduced women and girls to poverty, poor health, and illiteracy – unlike the treatment of women in the Muslim world or following the tenets of Islam.

Muslims around the world have condemned the brutal degradation of women and children by the Taliban regime. The poverty, poor health, and illiteracy that the terrorists and the Taliban have imposed on women in Afghanistan do not conform with the treatment of women in most of the Islamic world, where women make important contributions in their societies. Only the terrorists and the Taliban forbid education to women. Only the terrorists and the Taliban threaten to pull out women's fingernails for wearing nail polish. The plight of women and children in Afghanistan is a matter of deliberate human cruelty, carried out by those who seek to intimidate and control.

Islam is a religion that respects women and humanity. The Taliban respects neither.

REBUILDING THE AFGHAN FAMILY

We are committed to helping rebuild the Afghan family.

- We support a broadly-based and representative post-Taliban government that protects its citizens and preserves basic human rights for women and children – Afghan women have an important role to play in the future of Afghanistan.
- Even before September 11, the U.S. was the largest humanitarian donor to the people of Afghanistan.
- Since September 11 the U.S. has dropped more than 1.5 million meals into Afghanistan.
- The U.S. is working overtime to preposition food, blankets, and other important relief supplies to help Afghans face the upcoming harsh winter.
- Recent military successes against the Taliban can best be described as humanitarian successes for Afghan women and children. Seizing control of key cities from the Taliban will open humanitarian access to those Afghans who suffer the most.
- With U.S. support, the World Food Program is exceeding its objectives for food deliveries to the Afghan people. With U.S. support, the World Food Program has increased its daily food delivery in Afghanistan from 200 tons daily to 2,400 tons daily.
- In the first half of November, the World Food Program delivered over 30,000 metric tons of food into Afghanistan. This represented the largest amount ever moved by the WFP in Afghanistan. In the entire month of October, the WFP moved 29,000 metric tons of food into Afghanistan.

THE TALIBAN'S WAR AGAINST WOMEN & CHILDREN

HELPING REBUILD THE AFGHAN FAMILY

First Lady Laura Bush will kick off an effort to focus on the brutality against women and children by the al-Qaida terrorist network and the Taliban regime it supports in Afghanistan. That regime is now in retreat across much of the country, and the people of Afghanistan – especially women – are rejoicing. Afghan women know, through hard experience, what the rest of the world is discovering: The brutal oppression of women is a central goal of the terrorists.

LIFE BEFORE THE TALIBAN

Before the Taliban regime took power, Afghan women were protected by law, had important freedoms and were active participants in society:

- In 1977, women comprised over 15 percent of Afghanistan's highest legislative body;
- By the early 1990s women comprised 70 percent of schoolteachers;
- Women made up 50 percent of government workers; and
- 40 percent of doctors in Kabul were women.

LIFE UNDER THE TALIBAN

The Taliban quickly became one of the world's most brutal regimes and leading perpetrators of human rights abuses.

The Taliban regime has especially targeted Afghan women and children, taking away their basic freedoms, splintering their families, putting their lives at risk, and relegating them to poverty. For example, the Taliban:

- Forbid the schooling for girls over the age of eight;
- Shut down the women's university;
- Banned women from working (stripping a society in desperate need of trained professionals of half its assets);
- Restricted access to medical care for women;
- Brutally enforced a restrictive dress code;
- Forbade women from moving about their communities freely.
- Beat women for laughing out loud.

As many as 50,000 widows, have lost husbands and other male relatives in the course of Afghanistan's long civil war. Forbidden from working, they have been forced to sell all of their possessions and beg in the streets, or worse, in order to provide for themselves and their families.

The Taliban's disregard for its people doesn't stop there:

- More than 10 million children in Afghanistan have suffered under years of civil war and drought and now suffer under the repressive Taliban regime.
- One in four Afghan children will not make it to their fifth birthday.
- Afghanistan ranks number one worldwide in maternal mortality.
- One in three Afghan children is an orphan.
- Almost 1/2 of Afghan children suffer chronic malnutrition.

ISLAM RESPECTS WOMEN & CHILDREN

Islam has a tradition of protecting the rights of women and children, and supporting the family.

The Taliban regime has cruelly reduced women and girls to poverty, poor health, and illiteracy – unlike the treatment of women in the Muslim world or following the tenets of Islam.

Muslims around the world have condemned the brutal degradation of women and children by the Taliban regime. The poverty, poor health, and illiteracy that the terrorists and the Taliban have imposed on women in Afghanistan do not conform with the treatment of women in most of the Islamic world, where women make important contributions in their societies. Only the terrorists and the Taliban forbid education to women. Only the terrorists and the Taliban threaten to pull out women's fingernails for wearing nail polish. The plight of women and children in Afghanistan is a matter of deliberate human cruelty, carried out by those who seek to intimidate and control.

Islam is a religion that respects women and humanity. The Taliban respects neither.

REBUILDING THE AFGHAN FAMILY

We are committed to helping rebuild the Afghan family.

- We support a broadly-based and representative post-Taliban government that protects its citizens and preserves basic human rights for women and children – Afghan women have an important role to play in the future of Afghanistan.
- Even before September 11, the U.S. was the largest humanitarian donor to the people of Afghanistan.
- Since September 11 the U.S. has dropped more than 1.5 million meals into Afghanistan.
- The U.S. is working overtime to preposition food, blankets, and other important relief supplies to help Afghans face the upcoming harsh winter.
- Recent military successes against the Taliban can best be described as humanitarian successes for Afghan women and children. Seizing control of key cities from the Taliban will open humanitarian access to those Afghans who suffer the most.
- With U.S. support, the World Food Program is exceeding its objectives for food deliveries to the Afghan people. With U.S. support, the World Food Program has increased its daily food delivery in Afghanistan from 200 tons daily to 2,400 tons daily.
- In the first half of November, the World Food Program delivered over 30,000 metric tons of food into Afghanistan. This represented the largest amount ever moved by the WFP in Afghanistan. In the entire month of October, the WFP moved 29,000 metric tons of food into Afghanistan.

THE TALIBAN'S WAR AGAINST WOMEN & CHILDREN

HELPING REBUILD THE AFGHAN FAMILY

First Lady Laura Bush will kick off an effort to focus on the brutality against women and children by the al-Qaida terrorist network and the Taliban regime it supports in Afghanistan. That regime is now in retreat across much of the country, and the people of Afghanistan – especially women – are rejoicing. Afghan women know, through hard experience, what the rest of the world is discovering: The brutal oppression of women is a central goal of the terrorists.

LIFE BEFORE THE TALIBAN

Before the Taliban regime took power, Afghan women were protected by law, had important freedoms and were active participants in society:

- In 1977, women comprised over 15 percent of Afghanistan's highest legislative body;
- By the early 1990s women comprised 70 percent of schoolteachers;
- Women made up 50 percent of government workers; and
- 40 percent of doctors in Kabul were women.

LIFE UNDER THE TALIBAN

The Taliban quickly became one of the world's most brutal regimes and leading perpetrators of human rights abuses.

The Taliban regime has especially targeted Afghan women and children, taking away their basic freedoms, splintering their families, putting their lives at risk, and relegating them to poverty. For example, the Taliban:

- Forbid the schooling for girls over the age of eight;
- Shut down the women's university;
- Banned women from working (stripping a society in desperate need of trained professionals of half its assets);
- Restricted access to medical care for women;
- Brutally enforced a restrictive dress code;
- Forbade women from moving about their communities freely.
- Beat women for laughing out loud.

As many as 50,000 widows, have lost husbands and other male relatives in the course of Afghanistan's long civil war. Forbidden from working, they have been forced to sell all of their possessions and beg in the streets, or worse, in order to provide for themselves and their families.

The Taliban's disregard for its people doesn't stop there:

- More than 10 million children in Afghanistan have suffered under years of civil war and drought and now suffer under the repressive Taliban regime.
- One in four Afghan children will not make it to their fifth birthday.
- Afghanistan ranks number one worldwide in maternal mortality.
- One in three Afghan children is an orphan.
- Almost 1/2 of Afghan children suffer chronic malnutrition.

ISLAM RESPECTS WOMEN & CHILDREN

Islam has a tradition of protecting the rights of women and children, and supporting the family.

The Taliban regime has cruelly reduced women and girls to poverty, poor health, and illiteracy – unlike the treatment of women in the Muslim world or following the tenets of Islam.

Muslims around the world have condemned the brutal degradation of women and children by the Taliban regime. The poverty, poor health, and illiteracy that the terrorists and the Taliban have imposed on women in Afghanistan do not conform with the treatment of women in most of the Islamic world, where women make important contributions in their societies. Only the terrorists and the Taliban forbid education to women. Only the terrorists and the Taliban threaten to pull out women's fingernails for wearing nail polish. The plight of women and children in Afghanistan is a matter of deliberate human cruelty, carried out by those who seek to intimidate and control.

Islam is a religion that respects women and humanity. The Taliban respects neither.

REBUILDING THE AFGHAN FAMILY

We are committed to helping rebuild the Afghan family.

- We support a broadly-based and representative post-Taliban government that protects its citizens and preserves basic human rights for women and children – Afghan women have an important role to play in the future of Afghanistan.
- Even before September 11, the U.S. was the largest humanitarian donor to the people of Afghanistan.
- Since September 11 the U.S. has dropped more than 1.5 million meals into Afghanistan.
- The U.S. is working overtime to preposition food, blankets, and other important relief supplies to help Afghans face the upcoming harsh winter.
- Recent military successes against the Taliban can best be described as humanitarian successes for Afghan women and children. Seizing control of key cities from the Taliban will open humanitarian access to those Afghans who suffer the most.
- With U.S. support, the World Food Program is exceeding its objectives for food deliveries to the Afghan people. With U.S. support, the World Food Program has increased its daily food delivery in Afghanistan from 200 tons daily to 2,400 tons daily.
- In the first half of November, the World Food Program delivered over 30,000 metric tons of food into Afghanistan. This represented the largest amount ever moved by the WFP in Afghanistan. In the entire month of October, the WFP moved 29,000 metric tons of food into Afghanistan.

I was speaking with Carol Harvey who is putting on the schedule c conference on Monday. She said you were speaking at 4pm, right after Elaine Kaplan at 3:30. Just so you know, Elaine Kaplan is the head of the Office of Special Counsel who, among other things, is responsible for Hatch Act enforcement. I thought you'd want to know. If you have time, you might consider attending her session. She's a pretty good speaker, and you may find the content helpful.

Subject: Horn Questions

Here are NARA's proposed response to questions from Chairman Horn. We are still governed by the Nov. 20 date (next Tuesday). Please let us know if you think that we will not be able to meet that deadline, so we can let the Hill and OMB know.

Also, I have sent you both a new PRA notice on the 68,000, which we felt was necessary particularly in light of the new FOIA for those records.

Brett, I am still waiting to hear back from you on whether, in fact, you all really want us to provide you with copies of all 68,000+ pages, or is some other option available: e.g., you start with the sample we already did provide, or we give you an additional 5000 pages, which you all can review and then decide whether you really want and need to see any more, and/or you wait to see what the Reagan reps intend to do.

We will also be sending in a notice reminding you of five pending notices to open Reagan records, all of which did not involve P5 and for which the Reagan rep has authorized disclosure. (We will also be sending in new notices for records that we put on hold that do contain some P5 records.)

Finally, we still need to address overall guidance on how we are supposed to conduct reviews of Reagan records henceforth. Thanks.

I have signed off on the travel. If the travel is not being accepted by a WH employee from a political entity required to report the contribution of the travel expense under Federal election law, the travel expense or reimbursement will be required to be reported on Ken's annual public financial disclosure report filed in May 2002. In short, Ken has to report it unless a political entity (the RNC) is required to report it.

THE U.S. COMMITMENT TO THE AFGHAN PEOPLE

SUMMARY

The U.S. is committed to helping alleviate the suffering of the innocent Afghan people affected by the long-standing dire humanitarian situation in Afghanistan.

The U.S. has provided more aid than any other country. In fact, the U.S. has supported the Afghan people for decades, providing over $1 billion in humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan since 1979.

According to U.N. estimates, there were over a million displaced people in Afghanistan prior to September 11. The U.S. and its partners in the Central Asia region are working around the clock to move food and relief supplies into Afghanistan from surrounding countries, positioning it directly where it will be needed most as harsh winter weather approaches.

With U.S. support, the U.N. World Food Program delivered over 30,000 metric tons of food into Afghanistan in the first half of November, exceeding records for food delivery into the country The more than 29,000 metric tons that WFP moved in October had been the most food ever moved in an entire month in Afghanistan.

USAID ADMINISTRATOR ANDREW NATSIOS RETURNS FROM REVIEW OF U.S. HUMANITARIAN OPERATIONS INTO AFGHANISTAN

Andrew S. Natsios, Administrator for the U.S. Agency for International Development, just returned from a week (Nov. 10-17) in Central Asia. He was in the region to review the U.S. humanitarian operations into Afghanistan.

Natsios visited a camp for internally displaced Afghans in Khwaja Bahawudin, Afghanistan, that receives funding from USAID. There, he visited a school for girls, an income-generating project for women, a site for winter housing of 10,000 families, and a warehouse stocked with supplies funded by USAID.

On his mission, Natsios visited several Central Asia countries including:

- Ashgabat, Turkmenistan
- Tashkent and Termez, Uzbekistan
- Dushanbe, Tajikistan
- Bishkek, Kyrgyzstan
- Almaty, Kazakhstan

Natsios also met with U.N. and government officials and members of non-governmental organizations (NGOs); religious leaders; human rights, media and civil society advocates; and Afghan refugees -- many of whom were women.

Throughout the trip, Natsios pushed to accelerate the delivery of aid. In Turkmenistan, he reviewed aid from a USAID warehouse in Pisa, Italy, en route to Afghanistan, and discussed improving roads to speed more deliveries. In Termez, he visited the humanitarian barges, which moved the next day, and the Friendship Bridge, which still remains closed. Natsios urged officials to open it as soon as security permits because as much as 40 percent of humanitarian assistance could enter Afghanistan via this route.

USAID is also currently reviewing opportunities for small-scale, spot reconstruction for roads, wells and irrigation systems in northern Afghanistan where nearly 80 percent of the people in the most critical need of humanitarian assistance are located.

A LONG HISTORY OF SUPPORT FOR THE AFGHAN PEOPLE

According to U.N. estimates, there were over a million displaced people in Afghanistan prior to September 11. Over the past three months, 180,000 people have been displaced in Afghanistan.

Afghanistan has suffered two decades of war, an ongoing and debilitating three-year drought, and the collapse of government infrastructure and access to basic social services. As the Taliban directed national resources toward war and imposed severe restrictions on its people, including a restriction on women working outside the home, the situation of the Afghan people worsened:

- Six million people in Afghanistan and 1.5 million Afghan refugees depend on international relief programs for food aid.
- Afghanistan has the world's fourth worst child mortality rate, with about a quarter of Afghan children dying before age five.
- Afghanistan ranks number one worldwide in maternal mortality.
- As many as 50,000 widows lost husbands and other male relatives in the course of Afghanistan's long civil war.
- The average life expectancy in Afghanistan is 46 years.

The United States has long been the leading donor of humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan:

- The U.S. has supplied more than 80 percent of all food aid to vulnerable Afghans through the United Nations' World Food Program (WFP).
- Last year, the U.S. Government provided over $178 million in humanitarian aid to the Afghan people.
- The U.S. Government has provided over $237 million in aid to Afghanistan thus far in FY 2002.

PREPARATION FOR WINTER IN AFGHANISTAN

Afghanistan experiences extreme winter weather, with heavy snow in the mountains and the high plateaus. Even low-lying areas like Kabul can have up to 25 inches of snow on the ground in late winter. In preparation for the harsh winter weather, the U.N. World Food Program has stepped up its food deliveries into Afghanistan. At any given moment over the past few days, WFP had more than 2,000 trucks moving inside Afghanistan delivering food to various parts of the country, particularly rural areas.

With U.S. support, WFP delivered over 30,000 metric tons of food into Afghanistan in the first half of November, exceeding records for food delivery into the country. The more than 29,000 metric tons that WFP moved in October had been the most food ever moved in a whole month in Afghanistan.

In the Central Highlands of Afghanistan, where snow fall is heavy, WFP has already moved 13,000 metric tons of food, which is almost half the amount needed to help the people of that region make it through the winter. The U.S. and its partners are working to move food and other relief items into the region from a variety of routes.

The U.S. airlifted 20,000 wool blankets, 100 rolls of plastic sheeting, 200 metric tons of High Energy Biscuits, and one metric ton of sugar to Turkmenistan for distribution in Afghanistan.

As of November 14, humanitarian relief commodities from the international community began to move into Afghanistan from Uzbekistan by barge. The first shipment contained 50 metric tons of wheat flour as well as nonfood relief commodities such as blankets and winter clothing. A second shipment of commodities, including 200 metric tons of wheat flour departed for Hairantan, Afghanistan on November 15.

The U.S. purchased 15,000 metric tons of wheat in Kazakstan, which is due to arrive by rail in Turkmenabad later in November. Thereafter, rail shipments should arrive in Turkmenabad on a daily basis, at the rate of 1,000 – 1,500 metric tons per day. The U.S. Department of Defense has airdropped over 1.5 million Humanitarian Daily Rations into Afghanistan. Each ration is enough to sustain a person with a day's worth of calories. (Note: One bag of wheat flour will feed about four adults or a family of 6-8 people. There are 20, 50 kg bags in one metric ton).

 High Priority **

To meet our deadline of tomorrow, we need to send these questions to Horn today. Please let me or John Constance know as soon as you can if you have any comments, changes, or do not want us to send these to OMB yet. Thanks.

>>> GaryM Stern 11/16/01 1:24:40 PM >>>
Here are NARA's proposed response to questions from Chairman Horn. We are still governed by the Nov. 20 date (next Tuesday). Please let us know if you think that we will not be able to meet that deadline, so we can let the Hill and OMB know.

Also, I have sent you both a new PRA notice on the 68,000, which we felt was necessary particularly in light of the new FOIA for those records.

Brett, I am still waiting to hear back from you on whether, in fact, you all really want us to provide you with copies of all 68,000+ pages, or is some other option available: e.g., you start with the sample we already did provide, or we give you an additional 5000 pages, which you all can review and then decide whether you really want and need to see any more, and/or you wait to see what the Reagan reps intend to do.

We will also be sending in a notice reminding you of five pending notices to open Reagan records, all of which did not involve P5 and for which the Reagan rep has authorized disclosure. (We will also be sending in new notices for records that we put on hold that do contain some P5 records.)

Finally, we still need to address overall guidance on how we are supposed to conduct reviews of Reagan records henceforth. Thanks.

Subject: terrorism insurance: request for electronic handouts from Friday's meeting

I have a request from the Real Estate Roundtable to send them an electronic version of all of the handouts from last Friday's meeting, including the talking points on the liability issues. Can the keeper of these documents send me the most recent versions? I'd like to get them copies as early today as possible, as they are trying to get one or more of their members to place some op-eds in support of quick action.

Thanks,
Jeff Brown

Terrorism Insurance: A Key to Economic Recovery

"Without full cooperation between our government and America's private industries in support of insurance activities, there could be major disruption in the marketplace and harm to our economy." -- Leslie Baker, Chairman of Wachovia Bank

The tragic events of September 11 enacted an economic as well as a human toll. The attacks directly impacted industries such as airlines and hotels, but also have reverberated throughout many other sectors of the economy. Because our military strength and our economic strength are inseparable, our nation must work with resolve to restore economic growth. The current lack of insurance for terrorist acts poses an unnecessary and avoidable barrier to economic recovery.

Lack of Insurance

The terrorist attacks proved that the probability of catastrophic property and casualty losses was much higher than anticipated. Due to the current inability to evaluate the probability of more events or to handle numerous large events in a short time, the reinsurance industry has been reluctant to cover terrorist events. According to Marc Morial, Mayor of New Orleans, "Reinsurers already are saying they will exclude 'acts of terrorism' from coverage on a going-forward basis." Keith Buckley, an insurance analyst with Fitch Ratings Company, states that it is "the universally stated plan of reinsurance companies to add specific terrorism exclusions to reinsurance coverage." Without reinsurance, primary insurers are forced to either exclude terrorism coverage, charge very high premiums, or withdraw from the market entirely:

- On October 31, AIG decided to drop coverage of Brookfield properties, which includes 8 million square feet of office space in lower Manhattan. Brookfield secured a new policy with FM Global Insurance, but the insurance specifically excludes events related to terrorism.
- At Chicago's O'Hare airport, premiums have risen from $125,000 a year to $7 million a year.
- New York's JFK international terminal cannot secure the $1 billion in insurance coverage it needs. Developer Dave Sigman has considered shutting the terminal down.
- Seventeen of the twenty-five property insures that trade with Marsh, Inc. have enacted terrorism exclusions.

Although most state insurance commissioners are unlikely to approve terrorism exclusions to existing policies, insurance companies are free to completely drop coverage of potential targets. In addition, some states allow insurers to adopt exclusions to new policies without approval. Alternatively, insurers may move policies to non-admitted, or so-called "excess and surplus" carriers, which are non-licensed insurers whose policies are not subject to regulatory scrutiny and thus offer less protection to policyholders. Many insurance companies are likely to exercise this flexibility to protect their financial integrity. On October 23, Standard and Poor's warned that insurer ratings could fall if underwriters opted to continue offering terrorism coverage without support from reinsurers or the federal government.

Impact on Construction and Real Estate

Lenders require businesses to insure any property they use to secure loans. Without terrorism coverage, banks may not lend to new construction projects and many existing commercial properties may not be able to change hands. According to Thomas Donohue, President of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, "Bank loans for major construction project undertakings such as new power plants, pipelines, and commercial office space would sharply decrease without coverage."

Without adequate insurance, it will be difficult to develop, operate, acquire, refinance, or sell property. Thomas J. O'Brien, Senior Vice President of Finance for LCOR Incorporated, argues that the disruption could be widespread: "It will not only affect the real estate owners and lenders but also their tenants who lease facilities, their employees and customers as well as anyone who rents an apartment."

Impact on Banking

The terms of most loans require adequate insurance, and without insurance borrowers may find themselves in technical default on their loan. As a result, lenders could be in a position of accelerating payments under the terms of the loan or calling in the loan in its entirety. If banks do not call the loans, they may be forced to reduce the amount of available credit as they build reserves to protect against a terrorist attack.

Thomas J. O'Brien of LCOR argues that a significant amount of real estate-backed debt runs the risk of being in non-monetary default without the availability of terrorism coverage. According to O'Brien, "This lack of coverage raises profound liquidity concerns not only on existing loans and the institutions that hold them but on the ability of borrowers to secure any type of financing going forward."

Impacted Sectors

The potential disruption will fall primarily on areas of dense economic activity, such as skyscrapers and industrial factories. But it is likely that stadiums, trains, and many other areas will be impacted as well. According to Thomas Donohoe, "without adequate coverage, trucking firms, railroads, airlines, and ships may be unable to transport many types of cargo or may limit their destinations."

Impact on the Overall Economy

The absence of insurance coverage for terrorism risks will likely reduce the willingness of lenders to provide financing for existing commercial structures and deter the construction of new projects. The result could look like a "credit crunch." The Council of Economic Advisers estimates an overall reduction in 2002 GDP of 0.3 percentage point if the problem is not solved. This reduced growth rate of GDP is equal to 0.8 percentage point in the first quarter of 2002, 0.7 percentage point in the second quarter of 2002, and diminishes thereafter. The decline is caused by a reduction in asset values that reduces the consumption purchases of the household sector.

In addition, lower valuations reduce the incentive to invest in new structures. The overall liquidity effects also reduce the path for investment in non-residential structures.

Given the underlying weakness of the U.S. economy, it is not prudent to add more uncertainty by allowing insurance markets to fail. According to Steve Dreyer, Managing Director at Standard and Poor's Insurance Rating Service, "Absence of coverage could have a chilling effect on the economy if businesses from airlines to sports teams, to shopping centers curtail or even shut down activity, and if banks prove unwilling to make loans to companies without terrorism coverage." To prevent this disruption, the federal government must take action to provide a temporary backstop until the private sector develops the ability and capacity to insure against terrorist acts.

Talking Points on Terrorism Insurance

- The tragic events of September 11 had a considerable impact on our economy. We must act just as aggressively at home as we are abroad to prevent the U.S. economy from becoming a victim.

- At a time of economic weakness, we simply cannot afford to risk allowing more disruptions to the economy.

- Adequate insurance coverage is an essential component of a growing economy. Without insurance, you cannot get loans or sell existing property.

- The reinsurance industry is refusing to provide coverage against terrorist attacks, so the federal government must temporarily provide a backstop.

- This is not about helping insurance companies; it is about preventing a potential credit crunch and exacerbating an economic downturn.

- The federal government must also provide reasonable legal procedures.

- These procedures must: 1) ensure that victims can quickly recover real losses; 2) protect the taxpayers from spurious claims; 3) prevent unnecessary bankruptcies; and 4) reduce the likelihood that a terrorist attack will significantly burden the economy.

- Unfortunately, our current legal system cannot handle mass tort events.

- The end of the year is fast approaching, so the Congress must act quickly to prevent an unnecessary drag on our economic recovery.

Ok, folks. Little problem with the email system this morning. Attached is your War on Terrorism Daily. Please pardon me as the President pardoned the turkey yesterday.

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- "Arab fighters loyal to Osama bin Laden apparently shot dead at least 100 Taliban soldiers in Kunduz who were trying to give themselves up." (The Guardian, 11/19/01)
- "A 16-year old Afghan girl fronted Kabul Television's return to the airwaves yesterday, after a five-year TV blackout under the Taliban." (The Independent [U.K.], 11/19/01)
- "There was more celebration yesterday at the Kabul office of the United Nations refugee agency UNCHR when four women returned to their jobs. The Taliban had forbidden females to work, attend school or even leave home without a male relative. (The Sun [U.K.], 11/19/01)
- "'The good days are ahead,' said Rana Entezari, a neighbor who stopped by Mrs. Helal's house today. A doctor, she was fired from a laboratory for being a woman after the Taliban came to power." (New York Times, 11/19/01)

Message

Charitable Giving

- Since September 11th, America's charities have stood by America. After the September 11th attacks we have seen the best of America – particularly a tremendous outpouring of giving. Relief organizations received more than 1 billion dollars from concerned citizens.
- But many charities not directly involved in the relief effort have seen their donations fall. During this season of giving we should all dig a little deeper – if possible – to help the organizations that are helping our neighbors.

Humanitarian Assistance

- The U.S. is committed to helping alleviate the suffering of the innocent Afghan people affected by the long-standing dire humanitarian situation in Afghanistan.
- The U.S. has provided more aid than any other country. In fact, the U.S. has supported the Afghan people for decades, providing over $1 billion in humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan since 1979.
- According to U.N. estimates, there were over a million displaced people in Afghanistan prior to September 11. The U.S. and its partners in the Central Asia region are working around the clock to move food and relief supplies into Afghanistan from surrounding countries, positioning it directly where it will be needed most as harsh winter weather approaches.

President Urges Support for America's Charities

TODAY'S ACTION

- During a visit to a local charity, President Bush called on Americans to support charities of all kinds, especially during the holiday season. The Corporation for National and Community Service website (www.nationalservice.org) has been updated to provide information for all Americans who are interested in supporting a charity – either with financial support or by volunteering.

- The President also announced more than $1 billion in new grants to help the homeless through the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

- The President encouraged Congress to pass legislation enacting his Armies of Compassion initiative to significantly expand incentives for charitable giving, provide equal treatment for non-governmental organizations and support those Americans most in need.

BACKGROUND ON THE PRESIDENT'S VISIT

- The President visited So Others Might Eat, a Washington, DC interfaith charity that provides food, medical, rehabilitative and other assistance to the homeless. The President met with the group's volunteers, who help to serve more than 300,000 meals per year to the homeless.

- To support efforts by community organizations to aid the homeless, the President announced more than $1 billion in grants through the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The grants, part of HUD's Continuum of Care and Emergency Shelter Grant programs, will help the homeless to find emergency shelter, transitional housing and a permanent home. These funds will go to state and local governments and non-profit organizations in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands and Guam.

- The President's Armies of Compassion initiative is designed to improve the federal government's efforts to support and encourage the good work of community-based non-profits. Many of America's charities have been hit hard in the aftermath of September 11 due to the effects of a weakened economy. A recent survey by the Independent Sector found that 48% of Americans will reduce their charitable giving in the next six months if the economic slowdown worsens. The survey also found that 26% of Americans will stop giving or reduce the size of their donations to the charities they normally support due to their recent donation to September 11-related charitable causes.

- For many of the nonprofits providing vital, ongoing services to our communities, a 25% reduction in contributions during the most significant fund-raising period of the year would force the reduction or even elimination of services to some of our neediest individuals and families.

- President Bush wants to expand the resources available to charities of all kinds by making it easier for individuals, businesses and other organizations to donate money and resources to charitable organizations nationwide. The House of Representatives has already passed bipartisan legislation to support these efforts – and leading Senators are preparing to introduce an Armies of Compassion bill.

- The Armies of Compassion initiative includes:

  (1) Programs aimed at increasing charitable giving through tax incentives.

  - Allow individuals to make tax-free distributions from their IRAs to charities;
  - Provide enhanced deductions for farmers and restaurants to donate food to food banks; and
  - Allow an estimated 84 million taxpayers who do not itemize to deduct their charitable contributions;

  (2) Equal treatment for all non-governmental organizations – sacred or secular.

  - Require non-discrimination against non-governmental organizations based on religious grounds, including religious iconography, governance, and experience with government contracts;
  - Create 501(c)3 "EZ Pass" process so community-based groups can get tax-deductible status more easily; and
  - Establish a Compassion Capital Fund to educate and empower community-based organizations.

  (3) Other initiatives supporting vulnerable populations.

  - Mentoring for children of prisoners; and
  - Maternity group homes, principally for teenage unwed mothers.

TODAY'S ACTION

- During a visit to a local charity, President Bush called on Americans to support charities of all kinds, especially during the holiday season. The Corporation for National and Community Service website (www.nationalservice.org) has been updated to provide information for all Americans who are interested in supporting a charity – either with financial support or by volunteering.

- The President also announced more than $1 billion in new grants to help the homeless through the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

- The President encouraged Congress to pass legislation enacting his Armies of Compassion initiative to significantly expand incentives for charitable giving, provide equal treatment for non-governmental organizations and support those Americans most in need.

BACKGROUND ON THE PRESIDENT'S VISIT

- The President visited So Others Might Eat, a Washington, DC interfaith charity that provides food, medical, rehabilitative and other assistance to the homeless. The President met with the group's volunteers, who help to serve more than 300,000 meals per year to the homeless.

- To support efforts by community organizations to aid the homeless, the President announced more than $1 billion in grants through the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The grants, part of HUD's Continuum of Care and Emergency Shelter Grant programs, will help the homeless to find emergency shelter, transitional housing and a permanent home. These funds will go to state and local governments and non-profit organizations in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands and Guam.

- The President's Armies of Compassion initiative is designed to improve the federal government's efforts to support and encourage the good work of community-based non-profits. Many of America's charities have been hit hard in the aftermath of September 11 due to the effects of a weakened economy. A recent survey by the Independent Sector found that 48% of Americans will reduce their charitable giving in the next six months if the economic slowdown worsens. The survey also found that 26% of Americans will stop giving or reduce the size of their donations to the charities they normally support due to their recent donation to September 11-related charitable causes.

- For many of the nonprofits providing vital, ongoing services to our communities, a 25% reduction in contributions during the most significant fund-raising period of the year would force the reduction or even elimination of services to some of our neediest individuals and families.

- President Bush wants to expand the resources available to charities of all kinds by making it easier for individuals, businesses and other organizations to donate money and resources to charitable organizations nationwide. The House of Representatives has already passed bipartisan legislation to support these efforts – and leading Senators are preparing to introduce an Armies of Compassion bill.

- The Armies of Compassion initiative includes:

  (1) Programs aimed at increasing charitable giving through tax incentives.

  - Allow individuals to make tax-free distributions from their IRAs to charities;
  - Provide enhanced deductions for farmers and restaurants to donate food to food banks; and
  - Allow an estimated 84 million taxpayers who do not itemize to deduct their charitable contributions;

  (2) Equal treatment for all non-governmental organizations – sacred or secular.

  - Require non-discrimination against non-governmental organizations based on religious grounds, including religious iconography, governance, and experience with government contracts;
  - Create 501(c)3 "EZ Pass" process so community-based groups can get tax-deductible status more easily; and
  - Establish a Compassion Capital Fund to educate and empower community-based organizations.

  (3) Other initiatives supporting vulnerable populations.

  - Mentoring for children of prisoners; and
  - Maternity group homes, principally for teenage unwed mothers.

TODAY'S ACTION

- During a visit to a local charity, President Bush called on Americans to support charities of all kinds, especially during the holiday season. The Corporation for National and Community Service website (www.nationalservice.org) has been updated to provide information for all Americans who are interested in supporting a charity – either with financial support or by volunteering.

- The President also announced more than $1 billion in new grants to help the homeless through the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

- The President encouraged Congress to pass legislation enacting his Armies of Compassion initiative to significantly expand incentives for charitable giving, provide equal treatment for non-governmental organizations and support those Americans most in need.

BACKGROUND ON THE PRESIDENT'S VISIT

- The President visited So Others Might Eat, a Washington, DC interfaith charity that provides food, medical, rehabilitative and other assistance to the homeless. The President met with the group's volunteers, who help to serve more than 300,000 meals per year to the homeless.

- To support efforts by community organizations to aid the homeless, the President announced more than $1 billion in grants through the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The grants, part of HUD's Continuum of Care and Emergency Shelter Grant programs, will help the homeless to find emergency shelter, transitional housing and a permanent home. These funds will go to state and local governments and non-profit organizations in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands and Guam.

- The President's Armies of Compassion initiative is designed to improve the federal government's efforts to support and encourage the good work of community-based non-profits. Many of America's charities have been hit hard in the aftermath of September 11 due to the effects of a weakened economy. A recent survey by the Independent Sector found that 48% of Americans will reduce their charitable giving in the next six months if the economic slowdown worsens. The survey also found that 26% of Americans will stop giving or reduce the size of their donations to the charities they normally support due to their recent donation to September 11-related charitable causes.

- For many of the nonprofits providing vital, ongoing services to our communities, a 25% reduction in contributions during the most significant fund-raising period of the year would force the reduction or even elimination of services to some of our neediest individuals and families.

- President Bush wants to expand the resources available to charities of all kinds by making it easier for individuals, businesses and other organizations to donate money and resources to charitable organizations nationwide. The House of Representatives has already passed bipartisan legislation to support these efforts – and leading Senators are preparing to introduce an Armies of Compassion bill.

- The Armies of Compassion initiative includes:

  (1) Programs aimed at increasing charitable giving through tax incentives.

  - Allow individuals to make tax-free distributions from their IRAs to charities;
  - Provide enhanced deductions for farmers and restaurants to donate food to food banks; and
  - Allow an estimated 84 million taxpayers who do not itemize to deduct their charitable contributions;

  (2) Equal treatment for all non-governmental organizations – sacred or secular.

  - Require non-discrimination against non-governmental organizations based on religious grounds, including religious iconography, governance, and experience with government contracts;
  - Create 501(c)3 "EZ Pass" process so community-based groups can get tax-deductible status more easily; and
  - Establish a Compassion Capital Fund to educate and empower community-based organizations.

  (3) Other initiatives supporting vulnerable populations.

  - Mentoring for children of prisoners; and
  - Maternity group homes, principally for teenage unwed mothers.

Brett, thanks for the comments. As to the updating -- we try to update as often as there are events to report (nomination, hearing, confirmation etc), but sometimes there's delay we can't control due to bureaucracy here. Neal, can we try to do this at least once a week? thanks

Two suggestions on your judges web site, which is quite useful:
First, put
"date last updated" in some prominent place. Second, I would have someone update it virtually every day, or a few times a week if possible. Thanks.

My goal is to get a full set of draft regs by December 10.

You may want to weigh in with Phil and buttress my point that we should absolutely strive to get these regs final by Dec. 21 at the latest, which is the statutory deadline.

Although DOJ may want to call them interim final regs, they really need to be final for purposes of assessing awards, because once we release them, claimants should be able to rely on them and come forward to claim awards and waive tort claims.

Also, the more "final" they are by Dec. 21, the stronger our argument is for the quick and rough approach.

We're willing to draft as much of the actual regs here as DOJ wants, and given that we were able to do the airline loan regs in 14 days, this shouldn't be that hard. But you may want to echo that sentiment.

thanks

COALITION INFORMATION CENTER

11/21/2001

Today's Schedule

4:00a EST	British Foreign Secretary Jack Straw to host a media briefing on political and humanitarian events related to Afghanistan.
12:00p EST	President Bush shares a pre-Thanksgiving meal with troops at Fort Campbell in Kentucky.
12:30p EST	State Department's daily press briefing with Spokesman Richard Boucher.
2:35p EST	Secretary Rumsfeld visits the Military Intelligence Center at Fort Bragg North Carolina for a demonstration of U.S. Special Forces.

In Case You Missed It...

- "A 16-year old Afghan girl fronted Kabul Television's return to the airwaves yesterday, after a five-year TV blackout under the Taliban." (James Plamer; The Independent [U.K.], 11/19/01)

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- "In the past few days, we have witnessed…the pure joy and relief expressed by Afghan civilians in cities that the Taliban lost or abandoned." (John Donvan; ABC's "Nightline," 11/19/01)
- The first leaflets, containing reward information for the capture of al Qaeda leaders, were dropped over Afghanistan during the last 24 hours.
- "Four journalists were forced out of their cars at gunpoint yesterday and shot dead by Taliban diehards…The gunmen then stole satellite phones, cameras and the journalists' belongings." (Philip Smucker; The Daily Telegraph [U.K.], 11/20/01)
- A meeting of various Afghan groups and representatives is scheduled for the week of November 26 in Germany. The meeting will be brokered by the U.N. and is the first step towards the establishment of a broad-based representative government in Afghanistan.

Message

- U.S. troops are deployed far from home, in a war against terror and evil. Our Nation and the world are counting on them. They are making us secure, and they are making us proud.
- Our enemies are devious and ruthless. They have no conscience, no religion, and no mercy. They seek to kill our citizens. They seek to overthrow friendly governments. They seek weapons of mass destruction. But we are seeking them. We are finding them. And we are fighting them.
- We fight the terrorists – and all those who give them aid. America has a message for the nations of the world: If you harbor a terrorist, you are a terrorist. If you feed a terrorist or fund a terrorist, you are a terrorist. And you will be held accountable.
- The Taliban know that by now. Our military forces, the forces of our allies, and many Afghans seeking a better future are liberating Afghanistan. The Afghan people are celebrating. The Taliban and the terrorists are on the run. And we are dismantling the terrorist network in Afghanistan, piece by piece.

Facts of the Day

- The State Department's Bureau for Population, Refugees and Migration recently provided an additional $4 million to support humanitarian relief in Central Asia. Of that, $2 million went to the Red Cross/Red Crescent and $2 million went to UNICEF's emergency relief initiatives in Afghanistan.
- On November 20, USAID's Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance confirmed that a shipment of 5 medical kits arrived in Turkmenistan for distribution in Afghanistan. This brings the total number of kits to 10, each of which provides basic medical supplies and medicines for 10,000 people for three months.
- To date, the U.S. Department of Defense has airdropped 1,725,840 Humanitarian Daily Rations, totaling approximately $120 million, into Afghanistan.
- According to the U.N., since November 1 nearly 12,000 refugees have spontaneously returned to Afghanistan from refugee camps in Iran.

ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR GOVERNOR CARLIN

1. Pursuant to former Executive Order 12667, you notified former President Reagan and incumbent President Bush earlier this year of your intentions to release about 68,000 pages of Reagan records. (We understand that you sent one notice in February and another notice in June.) Please provide the subcommittee copies of these notices.

A: NARA's communications with the former and current Presidents concerning the review of records that may be subject to constitutionally based privileges has always been deemed sensitive, deliberative, and confidential, and NARA has never made such information available to outside parties. Accordingly, NARA does not believe it is appropriate to provide these notices to the Committee.

2. Section 2 of Executive Order 12667 required that, when giving notice, "the Archivist, utilizing any guidelines provided by the incumbent and former Presidents, shall identify any specific materials, the disclosure of which he believes may raise a substantial question of Executive privilege." Did your notices for the Reagan records identify any such materials? If so, please briefly describe what substantial questions of Executive privilege you identified.

A: NARA's communications with the former and current Presidents concerning the review of records that may be subject to constitutionally based privileges has always been deemed sensitive, deliberative, and confidential, and NARA has never made such information available to outside parties. Accordingly, NARA does not believe it is appropriate to provide these notices to the Committee.

3. To your knowledge, had former President Reagan's representatives completed or largely completed their review of these records under Executive Order 12667 before this Executive Order was revoked on November 1?

A: Former President Reagan's representatives have conducted a preliminary review of the records subject to the two notices, but had not completed a final review prior to November 1, 2001.

4. Did the Reagan representatives request any extensions of the 30-day time limit under Executive Order 12667?

A: No.

5. Did they object to release of any of the 68,000 pages of records within the 30-day time period under Executive Order 12667 or at any time thereafter?

A: Former President Reagan's representatives have not completed a final review, and therefore have not raised any objections.

REV_00136304

6. Have they given you any indication whether they planned to object to release of any records under the terms of the Executive Order?

A: Because former President Reagan's representatives have not completed a final review, they have not indicated whether they intend to raise any objections.

7. You suggested in your testimony that the Reagan representatives might have to re-review the records under President Bush's new Executive Order 13233. Do you agree with Mr. Whelan's testimony that the new Executive Order does not change in any way the standards or criteria for asserting privilege claims? If so, what possible need could there be for a re-review by the Reagan representatives?

A: As we understood Mr. Whelan's testimony, the new Executive Order does not purport to define the contours of constitutionally based privileges. Former President Reagan's representatives have not completed a final review; rather, they would simply be completing their initial review of the records.

8. You testified that the current White House has not yet started a substantive review of the 68,000 pages of records covered by your notices of many months ago in order to determine whether to invoke Executive privilege. Have they even asked for any of the records for this purpose?

A: Yes.

9. Do you have any idea when or if they intend to conduct a substantive review of these records?

A: The Executive Order authorizes the incumbent President or his designee to review the records. Any questions concerning the timing or intent of the incumbent President's actions should be addressed directly to the White House.

10. Is it your understanding that the new Executive Order takes us back to where we were in February of this year when you first noticed your intent to release the Reagan records? In other words, the former and incumbent Presidents both have a right to start over in their review of the records?

A: Given the fact that review of the records has not been completed by either the former or incumbent Presidents, NARA has provided notice to both parties pursuant to E.O. 13233.

11. Did you propose to release these 68,000 pages of records in response to a request for access under Section 2204(c)(1) of the Presidential Records Act? If not, is not the new Executive Order inapplicable by its terms to this proposed release? (See Section 3(a) of the Order).

REV_00136305

A: NARA has now received an access request under Section 2204(c)(1) of the Presidential Records Act, and has therefore provided notice to the former and incumbent Presidents under E.O. 13233. In any event, it is NARA's understanding that E.O. 13233 applies to proposed disclosures initiated by NARA through systematic processing.

12. The Presidential Records Act provides that, once any restriction periods authorized by the Act expire, the records of a former President "shall be administered in accordance with" the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). The only exception is that the FOIA's so-called "(b)(5) deliberative process" exemption does not apply. The Act further provides that presidential records shall be deemed to be records of your agency for purposes of applying FOIA. Do you agree that these provisions incorporate the time limits, requester rights, and all other requirements and procedures applicable under FOIA?

A: This question involves an interpretation of law, which should be answered by the Department of Justice.

13. Has it been and is it still your practice to apply the full range of FOIA requirements and procedures when processing access requests under Section 2204(c)(1) of the Presidential Records Act?

A: NARA has and will process access requests in accordance with the Presidential Records Act, including Section 2204(c)(1). The extent to which "the full range of FOIA requirements and procedures" apply to the PRA involves an interpretation of law, which should be answered by the Department of Justice.

14. Do you see any inconsistency between the applicable FOIA procedures and Executive Order 13233? To the extent there is inconsistency, will you follow the FOIA procedures?

A: This question involves an interpretation of law, which should be answered by the Department of Justice.

15. Do you agree that a notice to an incumbent and former President of intent to release records pursuant to a FOIA request would not toll the running of FOIA's time limits or otherwise affect the application of FOIA requirements?

A: This question involves an interpretation of law, which should be answered by the Department of Justice.

16. Do you agree that a former or current President could enlarge the FOIA time limits or otherwise affect the operation of FOIA by seeking an extension of time to review the records?

REV_00136306

A: This question involves an interpretation of law, which should be answered by the Department of Justice.

17. If action on a request is not completed within FOIA's applicable time limits, do you agree that the requester could invoke FOIA's exhaustion of administrative remedies provision and go to court even if the reviews under Executive Order were still underway?

A: This question involves an interpretation of law, which should be answered by the Department of Justice.

18. The Presidential Records Act and your implementing regulations (36 C.F.R.§ 1270.46) vest you with authority and responsibility to determine the validity of Executive privilege claims by a former President, do they not?

A: Any authority to assess the validity of Executive privilege claims by a former President is subject to direction from the incumbent President.

19. Executive Order 13233 divests you of this authority and responsibility, does it not?

A: Executive Order 13233 establishes a presumption that the incumbent President will support a claim of Executive privilege by a former President; the Archivist is obliged to follow direction from the incumbent President.

20. How do you intend to deal with this conflict? Will you follow the law and regulation or the Executive Order?

A: To the extent necessary, NARA intends to revise its regulations to be consistent with the Executive Order.

21. Although recognizing the possibility of privilege claims, the Presidential Records Act and your implementing regulations (36 C.F.R.§ 1270.44) grant Congress and the courts access to presidential records notwithstanding any restrictions imposed by the law or the regulations. Executive Order 13233 purports to impose essentially the same limits on congressional and judicial access that apply to public requests for access. How do you intend to deal with this conflict? Will you honor congressional and judicial requests for records in accordance with section 2205 of the Act? For example, absent an actual claim of privilege, will you provide records by the return date specified in a congressional or judicial subpoena?

A: The authority and procedures for access to Presidential records by Congress and the Courts are established in Section 2205 of the PRA. NARA has responded to such "special access" requests since 1989, which has until now included a "30 day" notice and review procedure, as established in Executive Order 12667, by which the former and incumbent Presidents could assert a constitutionally based privilege. NARA does not understand E.O. 13233 to be changing that process, except with respect to the review time periods. The order does not impose the same limits on congressional and judicial access that apply to public requests for access.

22. The Presidential Records Act and your implementing regulations (36 C.F.R. §§ 1270.20 and .22) provide that the Archivist will exercise discretion and authority on behalf of a former President after his death of disability, unless the former President designates another representative by written notice to the Archivist before his death or disability. Executive Order 13233 makes no provision for the Archivist to act on behalf of a former President. Instead, it provides that, absent a prior designation, the family of a former President may designate someone to act on his behalf. How do you intend to deal with this conflict?

A: All of the former Presidents subject to the PRA have designated representatives by written notice to the Archivist. When and if any such conflict arose, NARA will address the issue at that time in consultation with the former and incumbent Presidents.

23. Your implementing regulations (36 C.F.R. § 1270.46) also permit you to release records after 30 days following notice to the former and incumbent Presidents, and within less than 30 days if requested by Congress. Executive Order 13233 effectively negates this regulation, does it not? How do you intend to deal with this conflict?

A: NARA intends to revise its regulations to be consistent with the Executive Order.

24. You testified that you shared certain "professional concerns" with the Administration in the course of developing the new Executive Order. What were those concerns and how were they resolved? Did you raise any concerns over potential conflicts between the proposed Executive Order and the requirements of the Presidential Records Act and your implementing regulation?

A: The White House afforded NARA a substantial and unprecedented opportunity to provide comments, concerns, and input into the drafting process of E.O. 13233. NARA recognizes that there are many ways to address this issue, and NARA's input reflected our longstanding and direct experience in working with the records of former Presidents, as well as the Archivist's statutory mandate to make Presidential "records available to the public as rapidly and completely as possible consistent with the provisions of [the PRA]." This input was provided in confidence as part of the deliberative processes of the President. Therefore, NARA does not believe that it is appropriate to share the nature or details of these communications with outside parties.

THE AL QAEDA & TALIBAN CATALOGUE OF ATROCITIES

Al Qaeda & the Taliban told us at their press conference yesterday that it is time to "forget" their murder of thousands of innocent people from more than 80 countries on September 11.

As President George W. Bush has said, "We will never forget all the innocent people killed by the hatred of a few."

Presumably Al Qaeda and the Taliban would also like the world to "forget" about their other atrocities against the innocent. Below are a few examples from their growing catalogue of terrorist atrocities.

EXAMPLES OF RECENT AL QAEDA & TALIBAN ATROCITIES

ATROCITY

"Among the accounts of mutilations, beatings and arbitrary executions there was evidence of a new abomination: the torture of children. An unknown number of infants were savagely beaten during the Islamic militia's 14-month occupation of Taloqan, the former headquarters of the Alliance, usually for the supposed crimes of their parents." (Source: The Times [U.K.], 11/13/01)

ATROCITY

"The barbarity of the Taliban plumbed new depths when troops shot dead eight boys for daring to laugh, sickened refugees revealed yesterday. The teenage lads had been chuckling at the soldiers who suddenly raised their Kalashnikov rifles and gunned them down. It was one of a string of atrocities in the besieged Afghanistan city of Kunduz, which was last night poised to fall to the Northern Alliance. At least 300 frightened Taliban were killed by men from their own side because they wanted to surrender." (Source: The Sun [U.K.], 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"The Taliban is jailing children as young as 10 in Kabul to root out dissent, it is claimed today. According to French journalist Michel Peyrard, who was held by the Taliban for 25 days, the biggest threat to the extremist regime is its own paranoia. He said his fellow detainees included several children. On one occasion the nephews of an escaped political prisoner - aged 10, 13 and 19 - were rounded up. The eldest was tortured and subjected to a mock execution. The Taliban also jails leaders and military commanders for being traitors on only the flimsiest evidence." (Source: The Evening Standard (London), 11/9/01)

ATROCITY

"One day they came, and ordered everyone to go into the bazaar and protest against the bombings, and chant: 'Death to America'," said Salahuddin. "I was in my house and I had to go outside. When we refused to protest against America, they got angry." Another man who fled the village said he saw the Taliban drag a man called Lash Boi from his house to the mosque and beat him to death when he refused to protest. Lash Boi's three sons are on the front line now, fighting to avenge their father's death, he said." (Source: The Independent (U.K.), 11/9/01)

ATROCITY

"When the family returned six hours later they found that Abdul's right femur had been shattered by repeated blows from a Kalashnikov, the stock of the rifle leaving a clear imprint on the floor of the family's home. Doctors gave Nurala a couple of packets of paracetamol and bluntly told him that his son would never walk again. 'He was in so much pain for a long time, and it changed his mind as well,' Nurala said. 'I don't understand how anyone can do such a thing to a small child. I have spoken to many people about this and nobody understands it.' There are many others in Taloqan who have similar stories of children being beaten in front of their parents because their fathers were unable to hand over a weapon to the Taleban, of men who had a hand amputated when they were accused of stealing the bread that they carried home to their families, and of women who were raped after their husbands were taken away and imprisoned in Kandahar or Mazar-i Sharif." (Source: The Times [U.K.], 11/13/01)

ATROCITY

"'They burnt some of us alive.' It was almost the first thing he said to us. In the dust and squalor of a refugee camp, Salahuddin told yesterday how the Taliban burnt an entire family to death in their own home in revenge for the American bombing. He says he saw them bringing out the blackened bodies of the children. Then the Taliban took Salahuddin and the other villagers to the front line, where they ordered them to gather up scattered bits of bodies, all that was left of Taliban soldiers killed by the American bombs." (Source: The Independent U.K. 11/9/01)

ATROCITY

"'The Taliban commanders killed 100 of our friends,' said this defector, adding, 'They hung their bodies from lamp posts as a warning to the rest of us.'" (Source: CBS Evening News, 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"One said a doctor was shot dead for not treating a wounded Taliban soldier quickly enough, while others said a group of eight teenage boys were killed for laughing at Taliban soldiers." (Source: The Herald (Scotland), 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"Foreign Taliban soldiers, who have gathered in Kunduz for what appears to be a last stand, have gunned down more than 400 Afghan Taliban soldiers trying to defect to the Northern Alliance, the refugees and the alliance soldiers said. The 400 were killed in mass shootings late last week, refugees said, and were prompted in part by the defection of a local Taliban commander to the Northern Alliance. According to the reports, Arab and Pakistani soldiers with the Taliban have also begun shooting young civilian men of the Uzbek and Tajik ethnic groups suspected of trying to escape to territory controlled by the Northern Alliance. 'The foreigners came into the village and shot all the men,' said Muhammadullah, a 21-year-old man who crossed into Northern Alliance territory today. 'I saw this with my own eyes.'" (Source: The New York Times, 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"Foreign Taliban soldiers also killed dozens of Afghan Taliban soldiers on Friday at the village of Musazai near the Kunduz airport, refugees and Northern Alliance soldiers said. Refugees fleeing Kunduz said foreign Taliban soldiers had gunned down 125 Afghan Taliban soldiers who had been stopped on their way to the front lines. The foreign Taliban soldiers seem to have decided that the local Taliban were trying to defect. When they tried to stop them, a fight began and the foreign Taliban opened fire, the refugees said." (Source: The New York Times, 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"The BBC has confirmed that the central Afghan town of Bamiyan was totally destroyed by the Taleban before they fled over the weekend. Evidence has also emerged of Bosnian-style ethnic cleansing in the region involving the execution of hundreds of local ethnic Hazara men." (Source: BBC News, 11/13/01)

ATROCITY

"Our correspondent said every building, shop and house had been destroyed before the town fell on Sunday after a two-hour gun battle." (Source: BBC News, 11/13/01)

ATROCITY

September 1996 -- Upon capturing Kabul the Taliban castrated President Najibullah, dragged his body behind a jeep for several rounds of the Palace and then shot him dead. His brother was similarly tortured and then throttled to death. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

January 1998 -- In the Western province of Faryab, the Taliban massacred approximately 600 Uzbek villageres. Western aid workers who later investigated the incident said civilians were dragged from their homes, lined up and gunned down. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

August 1998 -- The Taliban entered Mazar-I-Sharif and went on a frenzy killing shop owners, cart pullers, women and children shoppers. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

August 2000 -- Taliban execute POWs in the streets of Heart as a lesson to the local population. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

June 2001 -- Taliban bombed the administrative center of Yakaolang, including the district hospital and an aid agency office. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

Massacre at Yakaolang -- Taliban forces committed a massacre in Yakaolang in January 2001. The victims were primarily Hazaras. The massacre began on January 8, 2001, and continued for four days. The Taliban detained about 300 civilian adult males, including staff members of local humanitarian organizations. The men were herded to assembly points, and then shot by firing squad in public view. According to Human Rights Watch, about 170 men are confirmed to have been killed. According to Amnesty International, eyewitnesses reported the deliberate killing of dozens of civilians hiding in a mosque: Taliban soldiers fired rockets into a mosque where some 73 women, children and elderly men had taken shelter. (Source: State Department)

ATROCITY

Massacre at Robatak Pass -- The May 2000 massacre took place near the Robatak pass. 31 bodies were found one site, of these, 26 were positively identified as civilians. The victims were Hazara Shi'as. (Source: State Department)

ATROCITY

Massacre in Bamiyan -- When the Taliban recaptured Bamiyan in 1999, there were reports that Taliban forces carried out summary executions upon entering the city. According to Amnesty International, hundreds of men, and some instances women and children, were separated from their families, taken away, and killed. Human Rights Watch reports that besides executing civilians, the Taliban burned homes and used detainees for forced labor. (Source: State Department)

ATROCITY

Massacre in the Shomaili Plains -- July 1999 Human Rights Watch reports that a Taliban offensive here was marked by summary executions, the abduction and disappearance of women, the burning of homes, destruction of property, and the cutting down of fruit trees. According to a report by the U.N. Secretary General on November 16, 1999, "The Taliban forces, who allegedly carried out these acts, essentially treated the civilian population with hostility and made no distinction between combatants and non-combatants." (Source: U.S. State Department)

ATROCITY

Massacre in Mazar-I-Sharif -- In August 1998, the Taliban captured Mazar-I-Sharif. There were reports that between 2,000 and 5,000 men, women and children -- mostly ethnic Hazara civilians -- were massacred by the Taliban after the takeover of Mazar-I-Sharif. During the massacre, the Taliban forces carried out a systematic search for male members for the ethnic Hazara, Tajik, and Uzbek communities in the city. Human Rights Watch estimates that scores, perhaps hundreds, of Hazara men and boys were summarily executed. There were also reports that women and girls were raped and abducted during the Taliban takeover of the city. (Source: State Department)

THE AL QAEDA & TALIBAN CATALOGUE OF ATROCITIES

Al Qaeda & the Taliban told us at their press conference yesterday that it is time to "forget" their murder of thousands of innocent people from more than 80 countries on September 11.

As President George W. Bush has said, "We will never forget all the innocent people killed by the hatred of a few."

Presumably Al Qaeda and the Taliban would also like the world to "forget" about their other atrocities against the innocent. Below are a few examples from their growing catalogue of terrorist atrocities.

EXAMPLES OF RECENT AL QAEDA & TALIBAN ATROCITIES

ATROCITY

"Among the accounts of mutilations, beatings and arbitrary executions there was evidence of a new abomination: the torture of children. An unknown number of infants were savagely beaten during the Islamic militia's 14-month occupation of Taloqan, the former headquarters of the Alliance, usually for the supposed crimes of their parents." (Source: The Times [U.K.], 11/13/01)

ATROCITY

"The barbarity of the Taliban plumbed new depths when troops shot dead eight boys for daring to laugh, sickened refugees revealed yesterday. The teenage lads had been chuckling at the soldiers who suddenly raised their Kalashnikov rifles and gunned them down. It was one of a string of atrocities in the besieged Afghanistan city of Kunduz, which was last night poised to fall to the Northern Alliance. At least 300 frightened Taliban were killed by men from their own side because they wanted to surrender." (Source: The Sun [U.K.], 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"The Taliban is jailing children as young as 10 in Kabul to root out dissent, it is claimed today. According to French journalist Michel Peyrard, who was held by the Taliban for 25 days, the biggest threat to the extremist regime is its own paranoia. He said his fellow detainees included several children. On one occasion the nephews of an escaped political prisoner - aged 10, 13 and 19 - were rounded up. The eldest was tortured and subjected to a mock execution. The Taliban also jails leaders and military commanders for being traitors on only the flimsiest evidence." (Source: The Evening Standard (London), 11/9/01)

ATROCITY

"One day they came, and ordered everyone to go into the bazaar and protest against the bombings, and chant: 'Death to America'," said Salahuddin. "I was in my house and I had to go outside. When we refused to protest against America, they got angry." Another man who fled the village said he saw the Taliban drag a man called Lash Boi from his house to the mosque and beat him to death when he refused to protest. Lash Boi's three sons are on the front line now, fighting to avenge their father's death, he said." (Source: The Independent (U.K.), 11/9/01)

ATROCITY

"When the family returned six hours later they found that Abdul's right femur had been shattered by repeated blows from a Kalashnikov, the stock of the rifle leaving a clear imprint on the floor of the family's home. Doctors gave Nurala a couple of packets of paracetamol and bluntly told him that his son would never walk again. 'He was in so much pain for a long time, and it changed his mind as well,' Nurala said. 'I don't understand how anyone can do such a thing to a small child. I have spoken to many people about this and nobody understands it.' There are many others in Taloqan who have similar stories of children being beaten in front of their parents because their fathers were unable to hand over a weapon to the Taleban, of men who had a hand amputated when they were accused of stealing the bread that they carried home to their families, and of women who were raped after their husbands were taken away and imprisoned in Kandahar or Mazar-i Sharif." (Source: The Times [U.K.], 11/13/01)

ATROCITY

"'They burnt some of us alive.' It was almost the first thing he said to us. In the dust and squalor of a refugee camp, Salahuddin told yesterday how the Taliban burnt an entire family to death in their own home in revenge for the American bombing. He says he saw them bringing out the blackened bodies of the children. Then the Taliban took Salahuddin and the other villagers to the front line, where they ordered them to gather up scattered bits of bodies, all that was left of Taliban soldiers killed by the American bombs." (Source: The Independent U.K. 11/9/01)

ATROCITY

"'The Taliban commanders killed 100 of our friends,' said this defector, adding, 'They hung their bodies from lamp posts as a warning to the rest of us.'" (Source: CBS Evening News, 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"One said a doctor was shot dead for not treating a wounded Taliban soldier quickly enough, while others said a group of eight teenage boys were killed for laughing at Taliban soldiers." (Source: The Herald (Scotland), 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"Foreign Taliban soldiers, who have gathered in Kunduz for what appears to be a last stand, have gunned down more than 400 Afghan Taliban soldiers trying to defect to the Northern Alliance, the refugees and the alliance soldiers said. The 400 were killed in mass shootings late last week, refugees said, and were prompted in part by the defection of a local Taliban commander to the Northern Alliance. According to the reports, Arab and Pakistani soldiers with the Taliban have also begun shooting young civilian men of the Uzbek and Tajik ethnic groups suspected of trying to escape to territory controlled by the Northern Alliance. 'The foreigners came into the village and shot all the men,' said Muhammadullah, a 21-year-old man who crossed into Northern Alliance territory today. 'I saw this with my own eyes.'" (Source: The New York Times, 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"Foreign Taliban soldiers also killed dozens of Afghan Taliban soldiers on Friday at the village of Musazai near the Kunduz airport, refugees and Northern Alliance soldiers said. Refugees fleeing Kunduz said foreign Taliban soldiers had gunned down 125 Afghan Taliban soldiers who had been stopped on their way to the front lines. The foreign Taliban soldiers seem to have decided that the local Taliban were trying to defect. When they tried to stop them, a fight began and the foreign Taliban opened fire, the refugees said." (Source: The New York Times, 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"The BBC has confirmed that the central Afghan town of Bamiyan was totally destroyed by the Taleban before they fled over the weekend. Evidence has also emerged of Bosnian-style ethnic cleansing in the region involving the execution of hundreds of local ethnic Hazara men." (Source: BBC News, 11/13/01)

ATROCITY

"Our correspondent said every building, shop and house had been destroyed before the town fell on Sunday after a two-hour gun battle." (Source: BBC News, 11/13/01)

ATROCITY

September 1996 -- Upon capturing Kabul the Taliban castrated President Najibullah, dragged his body behind a jeep for several rounds of the Palace and then shot him dead. His brother was similarly tortured and then throttled to death. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

January 1998 -- In the Western province of Faryab, the Taliban massacred approximately 600 Uzbek villageres. Western aid workers who later investigated the incident said civilians were dragged from their homes, lined up and gunned down. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

August 1998 -- The Taliban entered Mazar-I-Sharif and went on a frenzy killing shop owners, cart pullers, women and children shoppers. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

August 2000 -- Taliban execute POWs in the streets of Heart as a lesson to the local population. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

June 2001 -- Taliban bombed the administrative center of Yakaolang, including the district hospital and an aid agency office. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

Massacre at Yakaolang -- Taliban forces committed a massacre in Yakaolang in January 2001. The victims were primarily Hazaras. The massacre began on January 8, 2001, and continued for four days. The Taliban detained about 300 civilian adult males, including staff members of local humanitarian organizations. The men were herded to assembly points, and then shot by firing squad in public view. According to Human Rights Watch, about 170 men are confirmed to have been killed. According to Amnesty International, eyewitnesses reported the deliberate killing of dozens of civilians hiding in a mosque: Taliban soldiers fired rockets into a mosque where some 73 women, children and elderly men had taken shelter. (Source: State Department)

ATROCITY

Massacre at Robatak Pass -- The May 2000 massacre took place near the Robatak pass. 31 bodies were found one site, of these, 26 were positively identified as civilians. The victims were Hazara Shi'as. (Source: State Department)

ATROCITY

Massacre in Bamiyan -- When the Taliban recaptured Bamiyan in 1999, there were reports that Taliban forces carried out summary executions upon entering the city. According to Amnesty International, hundreds of men, and some instances women and children, were separated from their families, taken away, and killed. Human Rights Watch reports that besides executing civilians, the Taliban burned homes and used detainees for forced labor. (Source: State Department)

ATROCITY

Massacre in the Shomaili Plains -- July 1999 Human Rights Watch reports that a Taliban offensive here was marked by summary executions, the abduction and disappearance of women, the burning of homes, destruction of property, and the cutting down of fruit trees. According to a report by the U.N. Secretary General on November 16, 1999, "The Taliban forces, who allegedly carried out these acts, essentially treated the civilian population with hostility and made no distinction between combatants and non-combatants." (Source: U.S. State Department)

ATROCITY

Massacre in Mazar-I-Sharif -- In August 1998, the Taliban captured Mazar-I-Sharif. There were reports that between 2,000 and 5,000 men, women and children -- mostly ethnic Hazara civilians -- were massacred by the Taliban after the takeover of Mazar-I-Sharif. During the massacre, the Taliban forces carried out a systematic search for male members for the ethnic Hazara, Tajik, and Uzbek communities in the city. Human Rights Watch estimates that scores, perhaps hundreds, of Hazara men and boys were summarily executed. There were also reports that women and girls were raped and abducted during the Taliban takeover of the city. (Source: State Department)

THE AL QAEDA & TALIBAN CATALOGUE OF ATROCITIES

Al Qaeda & the Taliban told us at their press conference yesterday that it is time to "forget" their murder of thousands of innocent people from more than 80 countries on September 11.

As President George W. Bush has said, "We will never forget all the innocent people killed by the hatred of a few."

Presumably Al Qaeda and the Taliban would also like the world to "forget" about their other atrocities against the innocent. Below are a few examples from their growing catalogue of terrorist atrocities.

EXAMPLES OF RECENT AL QAEDA & TALIBAN ATROCITIES

ATROCITY

"Among the accounts of mutilations, beatings and arbitrary executions there was evidence of a new abomination: the torture of children. An unknown number of infants were savagely beaten during the Islamic militia's 14-month occupation of Taloqan, the former headquarters of the Alliance, usually for the supposed crimes of their parents." (Source: The Times [U.K.], 11/13/01)

ATROCITY

"The barbarity of the Taliban plumbed new depths when troops shot dead eight boys for daring to laugh, sickened refugees revealed yesterday. The teenage lads had been chuckling at the soldiers who suddenly raised their Kalashnikov rifles and gunned them down. It was one of a string of atrocities in the besieged Afghanistan city of Kunduz, which was last night poised to fall to the Northern Alliance. At least 300 frightened Taliban were killed by men from their own side because they wanted to surrender." (Source: The Sun [U.K.], 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"The Taliban is jailing children as young as 10 in Kabul to root out dissent, it is claimed today. According to French journalist Michel Peyrard, who was held by the Taliban for 25 days, the biggest threat to the extremist regime is its own paranoia. He said his fellow detainees included several children. On one occasion the nephews of an escaped political prisoner - aged 10, 13 and 19 - were rounded up. The eldest was tortured and subjected to a mock execution. The Taliban also jails leaders and military commanders for being traitors on only the flimsiest evidence." (Source: The Evening Standard (London), 11/9/01)

ATROCITY

"One day they came, and ordered everyone to go into the bazaar and protest against the bombings, and chant: 'Death to America'," said Salahuddin. "I was in my house and I had to go outside. When we refused to protest against America, they got angry." Another man who fled the village said he saw the Taliban drag a man called Lash Boi from his house to the mosque and beat him to death when he refused to protest. Lash Boi's three sons are on the front line now, fighting to avenge their father's death, he said." (Source: The Independent (U.K.), 11/9/01)

ATROCITY

"When the family returned six hours later they found that Abdul's right femur had been shattered by repeated blows from a Kalashnikov, the stock of the rifle leaving a clear imprint on the floor of the family's home. Doctors gave Nurala a couple of packets of paracetamol and bluntly told him that his son would never walk again. 'He was in so much pain for a long time, and it changed his mind as well,' Nurala said. 'I don't understand how anyone can do such a thing to a small child. I have spoken to many people about this and nobody understands it.' There are many others in Taloqan who have similar stories of children being beaten in front of their parents because their fathers were unable to hand over a weapon to the Taleban, of men who had a hand amputated when they were accused of stealing the bread that they carried home to their families, and of women who were raped after their husbands were taken away and imprisoned in Kandahar or Mazar-i Sharif." (Source: The Times [U.K.], 11/13/01)

ATROCITY

"'They burnt some of us alive.' It was almost the first thing he said to us. In the dust and squalor of a refugee camp, Salahuddin told yesterday how the Taliban burnt an entire family to death in their own home in revenge for the American bombing. He says he saw them bringing out the blackened bodies of the children. Then the Taliban took Salahuddin and the other villagers to the front line, where they ordered them to gather up scattered bits of bodies, all that was left of Taliban soldiers killed by the American bombs." (Source: The Independent U.K. 11/9/01)

ATROCITY

"'The Taliban commanders killed 100 of our friends,' said this defector, adding, 'They hung their bodies from lamp posts as a warning to the rest of us.'" (Source: CBS Evening News, 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"One said a doctor was shot dead for not treating a wounded Taliban soldier quickly enough, while others said a group of eight teenage boys were killed for laughing at Taliban soldiers." (Source: The Herald (Scotland), 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"Foreign Taliban soldiers, who have gathered in Kunduz for what appears to be a last stand, have gunned down more than 400 Afghan Taliban soldiers trying to defect to the Northern Alliance, the refugees and the alliance soldiers said. The 400 were killed in mass shootings late last week, refugees said, and were prompted in part by the defection of a local Taliban commander to the Northern Alliance. According to the reports, Arab and Pakistani soldiers with the Taliban have also begun shooting young civilian men of the Uzbek and Tajik ethnic groups suspected of trying to escape to territory controlled by the Northern Alliance. 'The foreigners came into the village and shot all the men,' said Muhammadullah, a 21-year-old man who crossed into Northern Alliance territory today. 'I saw this with my own eyes.'" (Source: The New York Times, 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"Foreign Taliban soldiers also killed dozens of Afghan Taliban soldiers on Friday at the village of Musazai near the Kunduz airport, refugees and Northern Alliance soldiers said. Refugees fleeing Kunduz said foreign Taliban soldiers had gunned down 125 Afghan Taliban soldiers who had been stopped on their way to the front lines. The foreign Taliban soldiers seem to have decided that the local Taliban were trying to defect. When they tried to stop them, a fight began and the foreign Taliban opened fire, the refugees said." (Source: The New York Times, 11/19/01)

ATROCITY

"The BBC has confirmed that the central Afghan town of Bamiyan was totally destroyed by the Taleban before they fled over the weekend. Evidence has also emerged of Bosnian-style ethnic cleansing in the region involving the execution of hundreds of local ethnic Hazara men." (Source: BBC News, 11/13/01)

ATROCITY

"Our correspondent said every building, shop and house had been destroyed before the town fell on Sunday after a two-hour gun battle." (Source: BBC News, 11/13/01)

ATROCITY

September 1996 -- Upon capturing Kabul the Taliban castrated President Najibullah, dragged his body behind a jeep for several rounds of the Palace and then shot him dead. His brother was similarly tortured and then throttled to death. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

January 1998 -- In the Western province of Faryab, the Taliban massacred approximately 600 Uzbek villageres. Western aid workers who later investigated the incident said civilians were dragged from their homes, lined up and gunned down. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

August 1998 -- The Taliban entered Mazar-I-Sharif and went on a frenzy killing shop owners, cart pullers, women and children shoppers. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

August 2000 -- Taliban execute POWs in the streets of Heart as a lesson to the local population. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

June 2001 -- Taliban bombed the administrative center of Yakaolang, including the district hospital and an aid agency office. (Source: Department of Defense)

ATROCITY

Massacre at Yakaolang -- Taliban forces committed a massacre in Yakaolang in January 2001. The victims were primarily Hazaras. The massacre began on January 8, 2001, and continued for four days. The Taliban detained about 300 civilian adult males, including staff members of local humanitarian organizations. The men were herded to assembly points, and then shot by firing squad in public view. According to Human Rights Watch, about 170 men are confirmed to have been killed. According to Amnesty International, eyewitnesses reported the deliberate killing of dozens of civilians hiding in a mosque: Taliban soldiers fired rockets into a mosque where some 73 women, children and elderly men had taken shelter. (Source: State Department)

ATROCITY

Massacre at Robatak Pass -- The May 2000 massacre took place near the Robatak pass. 31 bodies were found one site, of these, 26 were positively identified as civilians. The victims were Hazara Shi'as. (Source: State Department)

ATROCITY

Massacre in Bamiyan -- When the Taliban recaptured Bamiyan in 1999, there were reports that Taliban forces carried out summary executions upon entering the city. According to Amnesty International, hundreds of men, and some instances women and children, were separated from their families, taken away, and killed. Human Rights Watch reports that besides executing civilians, the Taliban burned homes and used detainees for forced labor. (Source: State Department)

ATROCITY

Massacre in the Shomaili Plains -- July 1999 Human Rights Watch reports that a Taliban offensive here was marked by summary executions, the abduction and disappearance of women, the burning of homes, destruction of property, and the cutting down of fruit trees. According to a report by the U.N. Secretary General on November 16, 1999, "The Taliban forces, who allegedly carried out these acts, essentially treated the civilian population with hostility and made no distinction between combatants and non-combatants." (Source: U.S. State Department)

ATROCITY

Massacre in Mazar-I-Sharif -- In August 1998, the Taliban captured Mazar-I-Sharif. There were reports that between 2,000 and 5,000 men, women and children -- mostly ethnic Hazara civilians -- were massacred by the Taliban after the takeover of Mazar-I-Sharif. During the massacre, the Taliban forces carried out a systematic search for male members for the ethnic Hazara, Tajik, and Uzbek communities in the city. Human Rights Watch estimates that scores, perhaps hundreds, of Hazara men and boys were summarily executed. There were also reports that women and girls were raped and abducted during the Taliban takeover of the city. (Source: State Department)

There is no agreed date for responding to the questions. As you will recall, Horn asked for responses by Nov. 20, and Ose by Nov. 30. We (through Faith Burton of OLA) have made clear that we do not view these deadlines as reasonable and that we will respond in due course.

Brett:

I attach a set of draft answers to the questions from Horn and Ose. The questions that don't have answers are the ones that we thought it best for you to take a first crack at. Please review when you can.

So that I can keep track of what's in the draft, please provide your draft answers in a separate document and please fax any comments to the existing draft. Thanks.

Subject: From Mindy Tucker -- Important facts on monitoring attorney client communications

As part of its effort to prevent further terrorist acts, the Department of Justice has expanded an existing regulation regarding the monitoring of certain communications of inmates subject to a special administrative measure. The regulation now allows the monitoring of attorney-client communication for those inmates subject to the special administrative measure.

In order to be subject to a special administrative measure the Attorney General has to have a certification from the head of a law enforcement or intelligence agency that reasonable suspicion exists to believe that a particular inmate may use communication with attorneys or their agents to further or facilitate acts of terrorism.

Currently less than 1/10 of 1% of the federal inmate population is subject to special administrative measure. The vast majority of inmates currently under special administrative measure were taken into custody prior to September 11, 2001.

There are important safeguards in place with this change.

* The attorney and his client will be notified if their communications will be monitored.

* The team monitoring the communications will have no connection to any ongoing prosecution that involves that client.

* No information that is protected by attorney-client privilege may be used for prosecution. There is not protection however, for communications related to the client's ongoing or contemplated illegal acts.

This type of monitoring has been allowed in the past through court order.

BRINGING TERRORISTS TO JUSTICE

- The terrorist attacks of September 11 were acts of war. The perpetrators should be treated not as violators of the law, but as war criminals, and the Military Order signed by President Bush reflects the unique nature of our present situation.

- The Military Order gives President Bush an additional tool in fighting the war against terrorism and another option to bring justice to foreign terrorists. The President's order states that military commissions will only be used in extraordinary instances in which the direct safety of the American people is at risk.

- As Commander in Chief, the President has the authority to establish military commissions. That authority is strengthened by statutes first passed by Congress during World War I and the Supreme Court has reviewed and upheld the practice in 1942 and again in 1946..

- Trial by military commission is a tested method for bringing individuals to justice during times of war while also protecting sensitive information. President Roosevelt ordered the trial of Nazi saboteurs by military commission in 1942 during World War II and the Supreme Court upheld the procedure. Military commissions have been used throughout American history – during the Mexican War, the Indian Wars, the Civil War, and the Revolutionary War.

- President Bush's requires certain protections that are consistent with American values: the right to counsel and a full and fair trial; they will not be discriminated against because of their race, gender or status; they may freely exercise their religion and will receive food, shelter and medical treatment.

- President Bush has said on many occasions that this war is not about one person, but about rooting out global terrorist networks. Disclosing classified information in a civilian trial of a foreign terrorist would jeopardize the ongoing war against terrorism and threaten American lives at home and abroad.

- When classified evidence must be used in civilian trials, the government is forced to choose between compromising sensitive intelligence information and letting criminals go free – the World Trade Center bombing trial resulted in the disclosure of sensitive classified information. After the attack on September 11, President Bush finds this choice to be unacceptable.

- Civilian courts would also place judges, juries, prosecutors and the press at risk from threats of reprisals, and the security of the courtroom facility would be a concern. Military commissions provide a safe alternative.

BRINGING TERRORISTS TO JUSTICE

- The terrorist attacks of September 11 were acts of war. The perpetrators should be treated not as violators of the law, but as war criminals, and the Military Order signed by President Bush reflects the unique nature of our present situation.

- The Military Order gives President Bush an additional tool in fighting the war against terrorism and another option to bring justice to foreign terrorists. The President's order states that military commissions will only be used in extraordinary instances in which the direct safety of the American people is at risk.

- As Commander in Chief, the President has the authority to establish military commissions. That authority is strengthened by statutes first passed by Congress during World War I and the Supreme Court has reviewed and upheld the practice in 1942 and again in 1946..

- Trial by military commission is a tested method for bringing individuals to justice during times of war while also protecting sensitive information. President Roosevelt ordered the trial of Nazi saboteurs by military commission in 1942 during World War II and the Supreme Court upheld the procedure. Military commissions have been used throughout American history – during the Mexican War, the Indian Wars, the Civil War, and the Revolutionary War.

- President Bush's requires certain protections that are consistent with American values: the right to counsel and a full and fair trial; they will not be discriminated against because of their race, gender or status; they may freely exercise their religion and will receive food, shelter and medical treatment.

- President Bush has said on many occasions that this war is not about one person, but about rooting out global terrorist networks. Disclosing classified information in a civilian trial of a foreign terrorist would jeopardize the ongoing war against terrorism and threaten American lives at home and abroad.

- When classified evidence must be used in civilian trials, the government is forced to choose between compromising sensitive intelligence information and letting criminals go free – the World Trade Center bombing trial resulted in the disclosure of sensitive classified information. After the attack on September 11, President Bush finds this choice to be unacceptable.

- Civilian courts would also place judges, juries, prosecutors and the press at risk from threats of reprisals, and the security of the courtroom facility would be a concern. Military commissions provide a safe alternative.

BRINGING TERRORISTS TO JUSTICE

- The terrorist attacks of September 11 were acts of war. The perpetrators should be treated not as violators of the law, but as war criminals, and the Military Order signed by President Bush reflects the unique nature of our present situation.

- The Military Order gives President Bush an additional tool in fighting the war against terrorism and another option to bring justice to foreign terrorists. The President's order states that military commissions will only be used in extraordinary instances in which the direct safety of the American people is at risk.

- As Commander in Chief, the President has the authority to establish military commissions. That authority is strengthened by statutes first passed by Congress during World War I and the Supreme Court has reviewed and upheld the practice in 1942 and again in 1946..

- Trial by military commission is a tested method for bringing individuals to justice during times of war while also protecting sensitive information. President Roosevelt ordered the trial of Nazi saboteurs by military commission in 1942 during World War II and the Supreme Court upheld the procedure. Military commissions have been used throughout American history – during the Mexican War, the Indian Wars, the Civil War, and the Revolutionary War.

- President Bush's requires certain protections that are consistent with American values: the right to counsel and a full and fair trial; they will not be discriminated against because of their race, gender or status; they may freely exercise their religion and will receive food, shelter and medical treatment.

- President Bush has said on many occasions that this war is not about one person, but about rooting out global terrorist networks. Disclosing classified information in a civilian trial of a foreign terrorist would jeopardize the ongoing war against terrorism and threaten American lives at home and abroad.

- When classified evidence must be used in civilian trials, the government is forced to choose between compromising sensitive intelligence information and letting criminals go free – the World Trade Center bombing trial resulted in the disclosure of sensitive classified information. After the attack on September 11, President Bush finds this choice to be unacceptable.

- Civilian courts would also place judges, juries, prosecutors and the press at risk from threats of reprisals, and the security of the courtroom facility would be a concern. Military commissions provide a safe alternative.

Other Events

- World leaders and representatives from Afghan groups meet today in Bonn, Germany, to discuss the future post-Taliban government in Afghanistan.

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- "It is hard to find a woman in Kabul now who does not remember a beating at the hands of the Taliban." (Time, 12/03/01)
- "...a suicide attack...took place on Saturday, as 500 foreign Taliban surrendered...In that incident, a foreign Taliban soldier blew himself up with a grenade, killing two Taliban comrades, badly injuring a senior alliance commander and leaving Andrea Catherwood, an ITN reporter, with shrapnel wounds in her leg." (Daily Telegraph [U.K.], 11/26/01)
- "It is believed foreign Taliban slaughtered moderates who wanted to surrender Kunduz." (Jeremy Armstrong; Daily Mirror [U.K.], 11/26/01)
- "The assessment that can be made after seven weeks of operations is astounding.... In the U.S., the necessity to crush Al Qaida and to liberate Afghanistan by the same means from a medieval regime was disputed by almost no one...." (Le Monde, 11/23)

Message

- The global coalition against terrorism grows stronger every day – every day al-Qaida is becoming more and more isolated.
- Our military forces, the forces of our allies, and many Afghans seeking a better future are liberating Afghanistan. The Afghan people are celebrating. The Taliban and the terrorists are on the run. And we are dismantling the terrorist network in Afghanistan, piece by piece.
- The structure of post-Taliban Afghanistan will be for the Afghan people to determine. But we will provide strong diplomatic and economic support to the aspirations of Afghan parties committed to an inclusive, democratic political structure, committed to the welfare of all Afghan men and women, and providing substantial local autonomy. This is a structure in which all Afghan ethnic groups can participate and find their rightful place.

Facts of the Day

- Since October 1, 2001, the U.S. Government has provided $246,761,996 in Humanitarian assistance to the people of Afghanistan.
- As of November 26, 2001, the Department of Defense had airdropped 1,883,100 humanitarian daily rations into Afghanistan.
- Since Mid-October, the U.N.'s World Food Program – through U.S. assistance – has delivered enough food into Afghanistan to feed 6 million hungry Afghans for one month.
- On November 23, for the first time, food aid was airlifted into Afghanistan from Tajikistan. 17 metric tons of wheat flour – enough for almost 275,000 people – was delivered to provide food aid to remote locations in northeastern Afghanistan.
- A ship carrying 10,000 metric tons of food aid for Afghans left Port Lake Charles, Louisiana, on November 20.

Other Events

- World leaders and representatives from Afghan groups meet today in Bonn, Germany, to discuss the future post-Taliban government in Afghanistan.

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- "It is hard to find a woman in Kabul now who does not remember a beating at the hands of the Taliban." (Time, 12/03/01)
- "...a suicide attack...took place on Saturday, as 500 foreign Taliban surrendered...In that incident, a foreign Taliban soldier blew himself up with a grenade, killing two Taliban comrades, badly injuring a senior alliance commander and leaving Andrea Catherwood, an ITN reporter, with shrapnel wounds in her leg." (Daily Telegraph [U.K.], 11/26/01)
- "It is believed foreign Taliban slaughtered moderates who wanted to surrender Kunduz." (Jeremy Armstrong; Daily Mirror [U.K.], 11/26/01)
- "The assessment that can be made after seven weeks of operations is astounding.... In the U.S., the necessity to crush Al Qaida and to liberate Afghanistan by the same means from a medieval regime was disputed by almost no one...." (Le Monde, 11/23)

Message

- The global coalition against terrorism grows stronger every day – every day al-Qaida is becoming more and more isolated.
- Our military forces, the forces of our allies, and many Afghans seeking a better future are liberating Afghanistan. The Afghan people are celebrating. The Taliban and the terrorists are on the run. And we are dismantling the terrorist network in Afghanistan, piece by piece.
- The structure of post-Taliban Afghanistan will be for the Afghan people to determine. But we will provide strong diplomatic and economic support to the aspirations of Afghan parties committed to an inclusive, democratic political structure, committed to the welfare of all Afghan men and women, and providing substantial local autonomy. This is a structure in which all Afghan ethnic groups can participate and find their rightful place.

Facts of the Day

- Since October 1, 2001, the U.S. Government has provided $246,761,996 in Humanitarian assistance to the people of Afghanistan.
- As of November 26, 2001, the Department of Defense had airdropped 1,883,100 humanitarian daily rations into Afghanistan.
- Since Mid-October, the U.N.'s World Food Program – through U.S. assistance – has delivered enough food into Afghanistan to feed 6 million hungry Afghans for one month.
- On November 23, for the first time, food aid was airlifted into Afghanistan from Tajikistan. 17 metric tons of wheat flour – enough for almost 275,000 people – was delivered to provide food aid to remote locations in northeastern Afghanistan.
- A ship carrying 10,000 metric tons of food aid for Afghans left Port Lake Charles, Louisiana, on November 20.

Other Events

- World leaders and representatives from Afghan groups meet today in Bonn, Germany, to discuss the future post-Taliban government in Afghanistan.

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- "It is hard to find a woman in Kabul now who does not remember a beating at the hands of the Taliban." (Time, 12/03/01)
- "...a suicide attack...took place on Saturday, as 500 foreign Taliban surrendered...In that incident, a foreign Taliban soldier blew himself up with a grenade, killing two Taliban comrades, badly injuring a senior alliance commander and leaving Andrea Catherwood, an ITN reporter, with shrapnel wounds in her leg." (Daily Telegraph [U.K.], 11/26/01)
- "It is believed foreign Taliban slaughtered moderates who wanted to surrender Kunduz." (Jeremy Armstrong; Daily Mirror [U.K.], 11/26/01)
- "The assessment that can be made after seven weeks of operations is astounding.... In the U.S., the necessity to crush Al Qaida and to liberate Afghanistan by the same means from a medieval regime was disputed by almost no one...." (Le Monde, 11/23)

Message

- The global coalition against terrorism grows stronger every day – every day al-Qaida is becoming more and more isolated.
- Our military forces, the forces of our allies, and many Afghans seeking a better future are liberating Afghanistan. The Afghan people are celebrating. The Taliban and the terrorists are on the run. And we are dismantling the terrorist network in Afghanistan, piece by piece.
- The structure of post-Taliban Afghanistan will be for the Afghan people to determine. But we will provide strong diplomatic and economic support to the aspirations of Afghan parties committed to an inclusive, democratic political structure, committed to the welfare of all Afghan men and women, and providing substantial local autonomy. This is a structure in which all Afghan ethnic groups can participate and find their rightful place.

Facts of the Day

- Since October 1, 2001, the U.S. Government has provided $246,761,996 in Humanitarian assistance to the people of Afghanistan.
- As of November 26, 2001, the Department of Defense had airdropped 1,883,100 humanitarian daily rations into Afghanistan.
- Since Mid-October, the U.N.'s World Food Program – through U.S. assistance – has delivered enough food into Afghanistan to feed 6 million hungry Afghans for one month.
- On November 23, for the first time, food aid was airlifted into Afghanistan from Tajikistan. 17 metric tons of wheat flour – enough for almost 275,000 people – was delivered to provide food aid to remote locations in northeastern Afghanistan.
- A ship carrying 10,000 metric tons of food aid for Afghans left Port Lake Charles, Louisiana, on November 20.

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- "It is hard to find a woman in Kabul now who does not remember a beating at the hands of the Taliban." (Time, 12/03/01)
- "...a suicide attack...took place on Saturday, as 500 foreign Taliban surrendered...In that incident, a foreign Taliban soldier blew himself up with a grenade, killing two Taliban comrades, badly injuring a senior alliance commander and leaving Andrea Catherwood, an ITN reporter, with shrapnel wounds in her leg." (Daily Telegraph [U.K.], 11/26/01)
- "It is believed foreign Taliban slaughtered moderates who wanted to surrender Kunduz." (Jeremy Armstrong; Daily Mirror [U.K.], 11/26/01)
- "The assessment that can be made after seven weeks of operations is astounding.... In the U.S., the necessity to crush Al Qaida and to liberate Afghanistan by the same means from a medieval regime was disputed by almost no one...." (Le Monde, 11/23)

Message

- The global coalition against terrorism grows stronger every day – every day al-Qaida is becoming more and more isolated.
- Our military forces, the forces of our allies, and many Afghans seeking a better future are liberating Afghanistan. The Afghan people are celebrating. The Taliban and the terrorists are on the run. And we are dismantling the terrorist network in Afghanistan, piece by piece.
- The structure of post-Taliban Afghanistan will be for the Afghan people to determine. But we will provide strong diplomatic and economic support to the aspirations of Afghan parties committed to an inclusive, democratic political structure, committed to the welfare of all Afghan men and women, and providing substantial local autonomy. This is a structure in which all Afghan ethnic groups can participate and find their rightful place.

Facts of the Day

- Since October 1, 2001, the U.S. Government has provided $246,761,996 in Humanitarian assistance to the people of Afghanistan.
- As of November 26, 2001, the Department of Defense had airdropped 1,883,100 humanitarian daily rations into Afghanistan.
- Since Mid-October, the U.N.'s World Food Program – through U.S. assistance – has delivered enough food into Afghanistan to feed 6 million hungry Afghans for one month.
- On November 23, for the first time, food aid was airlifted into Afghanistan from Tajikistan. 17 metric tons of wheat flour – enough for almost 275,000 people – was delivered to provide food aid to remote locations in northeastern Afghanistan.
- A ship carrying 10,000 metric tons of food aid for Afghans left Port Lake Charles, Louisiana, on November 20.

Joe would like to try to do this for Barry. I told him that it goes against the general policy of spending money to decorate offices. I also told him it wouldn't be very expensive. He said he would like to do it since he feels bad about having to move Barry and his staff. Morale was sort of low in that office and this might help.

Do you want to bring this issue to Hector's attention? Then he can decide if he wants to help Barry with this request or raise the issue with Joe, making him aware of his concerns regarding making a policy exception?

Thanks for your help as always!

FYI: Paul Colborn, Greg Katsas and I are all available at 3:00 today.
Paul Clement is probably at the Court right now, so we may not hear back from him for a while.

Let us know if you want to plan on 3:00, subject to change if Paul Clement can't make it. We can make a conference room available here at OLC if that's convenient.

Clement is on for 3:00. Per your suggestion, Colborn is also inviting a few others -- including the attorneys in Federal Programs who will do the initial litigating. I've reserved our big conference room.

Brett,

I talked to Jim from Pataki's office. He acknowledges (admits) that the second sentence is an expansion of liability protections fm what was passed previously. If this expansion is problematic they may prefer to excise it rather than lose ground on getting the original protections. It is also obvious that they are offering a different formulation from what came before.

Pls let me know what you think,

One thought for you to consider is how this affects the current contractual commitment FEMA has from NYC to indemnify FEMA for any and all claims arising out of FEMA's efforts at the site. We would not want to impair that, I would think.

In Case You Missed It

- "Monday was the first day at the Naswan Girls School…shut down by Taliban troops four years ago…'Today I am very happy,' said Bibi Zanan [9]...'I want to learn English.'" (Los Angeles Times, 11/27/01)

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- A three-day international conference on "Preparing for Afghanistan's Reconstruction" began Monday in Islamabad. More than 330 international development experts and Afghan NGO representatives are meeting to prepare for the challenges of providing international assistance in post-Taliban Afghanistan.

- "In the [Kunduz hospital] wards lay many wounded patients, but the doctor had little medicine to give them: It had all been stolen. 'The Taliban came and wrecked everything and took everything,' [Dr. Mohammed] Usman said angrily. 'Everything that was here was brought in by the U.N.. and the Taliban took it all away today." (Robyn Dixon; Los Angeles Times, 11/27/01)

- "Under the Taliban, going to school was frightening. We were desperate to learn, but we always had to worry about being caught and dealt with by authorities,' Fatema [18] says." (Thor Valdmanis; USA Today, 11/27/01)

- "Around the city [of Kunduz], the Taliban's fall brought a general sense of relief and the pleasure of newfound freedoms." (Sharon LaFroniere; Washington Post, 11/27/01)

Message

- The humanitarian situation in Afghanistan is dire. Years of civil war, compounded by the cruel and selfish rule of the Taliban and the worst drought in living memory, have made matters worse.

- Millions face the threat of starvation. 70% of the Afghan people are malnourished. Only 13% of the Afghan people have access to clean water. One in four Afghan children will not make it to their fifth birthday. According to U.N. estimates, there were over a million displaced people in Afghanistan prior to September 11. And before September 11 there were over 3.5 million Afghan refugees.

- For years the U.S. has been the largest humanitarian aid donor to the people of Afghanistan. And the U.S. and its coalition allies are working around the clock to help get food, blankets, medicine and other important humanitarian aid to the Afghan people before their harsh winter sets in.

- The Al Qaeda and Taliban contribution to the Afghan people has been a deliberate and systematic campaign to disrupt the efforts of international relief agencies to deliver desperately needed food and medical supplies to the Afghan people. Among other things, the Taliban have seized and looted humanitarian supplies for themselves and have harassed and beaten Afghan and international aid workers.

- The Taliban are clearly more interested in protecting the Al Qaeda terrorist network than feeding the starving innocent people of Afghanistan.

Facts of the Day

- According to new figures, since October 1 the U.S. government has provided $164,381,033 in humanitarian assistance to the people of Afghanistan.

- Since September 11, the U.N. World Food Program – with U.S. assistance -- has delivered 70,000 tons of food into Afghanistan.

- In November, so far, the World Food Program – with U.S. assistance -- has delivered enough food commodities to cover the needs of 4.3 million people.

AL QAEDA & THE TALIBAN: THE MAKING OF A HUMANITARIAN DISASTER

The humanitarian situation in Afghanistan is dire. Years of civil war -- compounded by the cruel and selfish rule of the Taliban and the worst drought in living memory – have made matters worse.

Al Qaeda and the Taliban have not only failed to provide security, food, and shelter for the Afghan people, but they have disrupted the efforts of international relief agencies to deliver desperately needed food and medical supplies to the Afghan people. Among other things, the Taliban have seized and looted humanitarian supplies for themselves and have harassed and beaten Afghan and international aid workers.

The U.S. has long been the largest humanitarian aid donor to the people of Afghanistan.

AFGHANISTAN BEFORE SEPTEMBER 11

Afghanistan has suffered two decades of war, the worst drought in living memory, and the collapse of government infrastructure and access to basic social services. As Al Qaeda and the Taliban directed national resources toward war and imposed severe restrictions on its people, including a restriction on women working outside the home, the situation of the Afghan people worsened. The statistics are alarming:

- Millions face the threat of starvation.
- 70% of the Afghan people are malnourished.
- Only 13% of the Afghan people have access to clean water.
- One in four Afghan children will not make it to their fifth birthday.
- One in three Afghan children is an orphan.
- One in two Afghan children is malnourished.
- Afghanistan has the world's fourth worst child mortality rate.
- Afghanistan ranks number one worldwide in maternal mortality.
- According to U.N. estimates, there were over a million displaced people in Afghanistan prior to September 11.
- Before September 11 there were over 3.5 million Afghan refugees
- Six million people in Afghanistan and 1.5 million Afghan refugees depend on international relief programs for food.
- As many as 50,000 widows lost husbands and other male relatives in the course of Afghanistan's long civil war.
- The average life expectancy in Afghanistan is 46 years.

THE HARSH AFGHAN WINTER

Afghanistan is a mountainous country in a dry part of the world which experiences extremes of climate and weather. Afghanistan experiences extreme winter weather, with heavy snow in the mountains and the high plateaus. Even low-lying areas like Kabul can have up to 25 inches of snow on the ground in late winter.

The Afghan winters are harsh. Whole families of refugees live in tents no more than 3.5 feet square. They sleep on the ground with no blankets or protection from the brutal winters. Last winter, desperate parents dug holes in the ground, placed their children in the holes, and laid on top of them to give their children a slight respite from frigid temperatures.

Countless Afghans find themselves with no protection whatsoever against the harsh Afghan winter. For example, the U.N. Coordinator for Afghanistan reported that over 110 displaced persons taking shelter in camps in Herat died from extreme cold on the night of January 29, 2001. Children, the elderly, and women were among the main victims of the cold snap, which saw temperatures as low as –25 degrees centigrade.

THE TERRORIST CONTRIBUTION TO THE SUFFERING AFGHAN PEOPLE

The U.S. and its coalition partners work around the clock to help get food and other aid to the Afghan people.

The Al Qaeda and Taliban contribution to the Afghan people has been a deliberate and systematic campaign to disrupt the efforts of international relief agencies to deliver desperately needed food and medical supplies to the Afghan people.

Among other things, the Taliban have seized and looted humanitarian supplies for themselves and have harassed and beaten Afghan and international aid workers.

The Taliban and Al Qaeda are clearly more interested in protecting Al Qaeda than feeding the starving people of Afghanistan.

The following specific examples of Taliban disruptions are contained in the November 6 State Department Fact Sheet: The Taliban's Betrayal of the Afghan People:

- October 16: The Taliban seized control of two U.N. World Food Program (WFP) warehouses, one in Kabul, and one in Kandahar, containing more than half the World Food Program's wheat supply for Afghanistan. The WFP in Kandahar had been feeding 150,000 Afghans a month before the Taliban seizure. The WFP reports that 1,600 tons of food and several vehicles have since disappeared from the Kandahar WFP warehouse. (Source: World Food Program)

- The Taliban are actually hijacking humanitarian convoys for military purposes. The November 6 Washington Post reports, "A truck in a convoy purportedly on a humanitarian mission to deliver food tipped over, and crates of tank and mortar shells could be seen spilling to the ground underneath a thin layer of flour."

- "UNICEF lost all its properties and had its offices looted when the Taliban took control in north Afghanistan in 1997, and U.N. operations were suspended." (Source: UNICEF)

- November 6: The UN refugee agency (UNHCR) says the Taliban is hindering humanitarian efforts inside Afghanistan… Speaking on behalf of the UNHCR, Peter Kessler said the Taliban was failing to cooperate: "The UNHCR and our partner agencies have had our vehicles stolen, our offices taken over and our staff beaten." (Source: BBC)

- October 31: The UN Refugee Agency (UNHCR) offices in Spin Boldak were taken over by Taliban soldiers. (Source: UNHCR)

- October 18: Taliban soldiers seized the Mercy Corps International Office in Kandahar, and remain in possession of the office and MCI vehicles. (Source: Mercy Corps)

- October 17: The Taliban occupied the Kunduz office and warehouse of the International Organization for Migration (IOM). The warehouse had been stocked with winter clothing, shoes and blankets to be distributed to internally displaced persons in the region. (Source: IOM)

- October 16: The Swedish Committee for Afghanistan reported that its compound in Taliban-controlled Mazar-I-Sharif was seized on October 16, with fuel stores set ablaze by the Taliban. (Source: Human Rights Watch)

- October 16: The UN Security Council demanded that the Taliban cease obstructing aid destined for the Afghan people.

- October 8: Armed Taliban entered the compound of a demining NGO in Kandahar and demanded vehicles. Staff who resisted were beaten. The Taliban left with several ambulances, seven pick-up trucks, and six cargo trucks from the compound. (Source: Human Rights Watch)

THE U.S. COMMITMENT TO FEEDING & PROTECTING THE AFGHAN PEOPLE

The United States has long been the leading donor of humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan:

- The U.S. has supplied more than 80 percent of all food aid to vulnerable Afghans through the United Nations' World Food Program (WFP). Since September 11th, WFP has delivered about 70,000 tons of food into Afghanistan. In November so far, WFP has delivered enough food commodities to cover the needs of 4.3 million people.

- Last year, the U.S. Government provided over $178 million in humanitarian aid to the Afghan people.

- The U.S. Government has provided over $164 million in aid to Afghanistan thus far since October 1.

- With U.S. support, WFP delivered over 30,000 metric tons of food into Afghanistan in the first half of November, exceeding records for food delivery into the country. The more than 29,000 metric tons that WFP moved in October had been the most food ever moved in a whole month in Afghanistan.

- The U.S. airlifted 20,000 wool blankets, 100 rolls of plastic sheeting, 200 metric tons of High Energy Biscuits, and one metric ton of sugar to Turkmenistan for distribution in Afghanistan.

- The U.S. purchased 15,000 metric tons of wheat in Kazakstan, which is moving by railway to Turkmenabad. The first rail car of wheat arrived on November 23 carrying 1,500 metric tons of wheat.

- The U.S. Department of Defense has airdropped nearly 2 million Humanitarian Daily Rations into Afghanistan. Each ration is enough to sustain a person with a day's worth of calories.

- On November 20, a ship departed Port Lake Charles, Louisiana with 10,000 metric tons of U.S.-donated food for the people of Afghanistan.

- A shipment of five large USAID-funded medical shipments arrived in Turkmenistan on November 12 for distribution by UNICEF. Each shipment provides basic medical supplies and medicines for 10,000 people for three months. USAID has provided a total of 10 kits for Afghanistan.

- On November 21, 65,000 metric tons of food provided by USAID arrived in Iran for transfer to WFP regional hubs in Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan, Iran, Tajikistan, and Kyrgyzstan for delivery into Afghanistan.

- On November 24, USAID airlifted 350,000 wheat bags to Turkmenabad for WFP to use to package and distribute WFP wheat supplies.

- USAID airlifted 1,000 rolls of plastic sheeting to Turkmenistan for emergency shelter use in Afghanistan.

- USAID transported 20,400 blankets from its stockpiles on October 23, and an additional 15,000 blankets on October 25, to Pakistan for the UN High Commissioner for Refugees to use in the event of a refugee influx.

Facts of the Day

- According to new figures, since October 1 the U.S. government has provided $164,381,033 in humanitarian assistance to the people of Afghanistan.

- Since September 11, the U.N. World Food Program – with U.S. assistance -- has delivered 70,000 tons of food into Afghanistan.

- In November, so far, the World Food Program – with U.S. assistance -- has delivered enough food commodities to cover the needs of 4.3 million people.

AL QAEDA & THE TALIBAN: THE MAKING OF A HUMANITARIAN DISASTER

The humanitarian situation in Afghanistan is dire. Years of civil war -- compounded by the cruel and selfish rule of the Taliban and the worst drought in living memory – have made matters worse.

Al Qaeda and the Taliban have not only failed to provide security, food, and shelter for the Afghan people, but they have disrupted the efforts of international relief agencies to deliver desperately needed food and medical supplies to the Afghan people. Among other things, the Taliban have seized and looted humanitarian supplies for themselves and have harassed and beaten Afghan and international aid workers.

The U.S. has long been the largest humanitarian aid donor to the people of Afghanistan.

AFGHANISTAN BEFORE SEPTEMBER 11

Afghanistan has suffered two decades of war, the worst drought in living memory, and the collapse of government infrastructure and access to basic social services. As Al Qaeda and the Taliban directed national resources toward war and imposed severe restrictions on its people, including a restriction on women working outside the home, the situation of the Afghan people worsened. The statistics are alarming:

- Millions face the threat of starvation.
- 70% of the Afghan people are malnourished.
- Only 13% of the Afghan people have access to clean water.
- One in four Afghan children will not make it to their fifth birthday.
- One in three Afghan children is an orphan.
- One in two Afghan children is malnourished.
- Afghanistan has the world's fourth worst child mortality rate.
- Afghanistan ranks number one worldwide in maternal mortality.
- According to U.N. estimates, there were over a million displaced people in Afghanistan prior to September 11.
- Before September 11 there were over 3.5 million Afghan refugees
- Six million people in Afghanistan and 1.5 million Afghan refugees depend on international relief programs for food.
- As many as 50,000 widows lost husbands and other male relatives in the course of Afghanistan's long civil war.
- The average life expectancy in Afghanistan is 46 years.

THE HARSH AFGHAN WINTER

Afghanistan is a mountainous country in a dry part of the world which experiences extremes of climate and weather. Afghanistan experiences extreme winter weather, with heavy snow in the mountains and the high plateaus. Even low-lying areas like Kabul can have up to 25 inches of snow on the ground in late winter.

The Afghan winters are harsh. Whole families of refugees live in tents no more than 3.5 feet square. They sleep on the ground with no blankets or protection from the brutal winters. Last winter, desperate parents dug holes in the ground, placed their children in the holes, and laid on top of them to give their children a slight respite from frigid temperatures.

Countless Afghans find themselves with no protection whatsoever against the harsh Afghan winter. For example, the U.N. Coordinator for Afghanistan reported that over 110 displaced persons taking shelter in camps in Herat died from extreme cold on the night of January 29, 2001. Children, the elderly, and women were among the main victims of the cold snap, which saw temperatures as low as –25 degrees centigrade.

THE TERRORIST CONTRIBUTION TO THE SUFFERING AFGHAN PEOPLE

The U.S. and its coalition partners work around the clock to help get food and other aid to the Afghan people.

The Al Qaeda and Taliban contribution to the Afghan people has been a deliberate and systematic campaign to disrupt the efforts of international relief agencies to deliver desperately needed food and medical supplies to the Afghan people.

Among other things, the Taliban have seized and looted humanitarian supplies for themselves and have harassed and beaten Afghan and international aid workers.

The Taliban and Al Qaeda are clearly more interested in protecting Al Qaeda than feeding the starving people of Afghanistan.

The following specific examples of Taliban disruptions are contained in the November 6 State Department Fact Sheet: The Taliban's Betrayal of the Afghan People:

- October 16: The Taliban seized control of two U.N. World Food Program (WFP) warehouses, one in Kabul, and one in Kandahar, containing more than half the World Food Program's wheat supply for Afghanistan. The WFP in Kandahar had been feeding 150,000 Afghans a month before the Taliban seizure. The WFP reports that 1,600 tons of food and several vehicles have since disappeared from the Kandahar WFP warehouse. (Source: World Food Program)

- The Taliban are actually hijacking humanitarian convoys for military purposes. The November 6 Washington Post reports, "A truck in a convoy purportedly on a humanitarian mission to deliver food tipped over, and crates of tank and mortar shells could be seen spilling to the ground underneath a thin layer of flour."

- "UNICEF lost all its properties and had its offices looted when the Taliban took control in north Afghanistan in 1997, and U.N. operations were suspended." (Source: UNICEF)

- November 6: The UN refugee agency (UNHCR) says the Taliban is hindering humanitarian efforts inside Afghanistan… Speaking on behalf of the UNHCR, Peter Kessler said the Taliban was failing to cooperate: "The UNHCR and our partner agencies have had our vehicles stolen, our offices taken over and our staff beaten." (Source: BBC)

- October 31: The UN Refugee Agency (UNHCR) offices in Spin Boldak were taken over by Taliban soldiers. (Source: UNHCR)

- October 18: Taliban soldiers seized the Mercy Corps International Office in Kandahar, and remain in possession of the office and MCI vehicles. (Source: Mercy Corps)

- October 17: The Taliban occupied the Kunduz office and warehouse of the International Organization for Migration (IOM). The warehouse had been stocked with winter clothing, shoes and blankets to be distributed to internally displaced persons in the region. (Source: IOM)

- October 16: The Swedish Committee for Afghanistan reported that its compound in Taliban-controlled Mazar-I-Sharif was seized on October 16, with fuel stores set ablaze by the Taliban. (Source: Human Rights Watch)

- October 16: The UN Security Council demanded that the Taliban cease obstructing aid destined for the Afghan people.

- October 8: Armed Taliban entered the compound of a demining NGO in Kandahar and demanded vehicles. Staff who resisted were beaten. The Taliban left with several ambulances, seven pick-up trucks, and six cargo trucks from the compound. (Source: Human Rights Watch)

THE U.S. COMMITMENT TO FEEDING & PROTECTING THE AFGHAN PEOPLE

The United States has long been the leading donor of humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan:

- The U.S. has supplied more than 80 percent of all food aid to vulnerable Afghans through the United Nations' World Food Program (WFP). Since September 11th, WFP has delivered about 70,000 tons of food into Afghanistan. In November so far, WFP has delivered enough food commodities to cover the needs of 4.3 million people.

- Last year, the U.S. Government provided over $178 million in humanitarian aid to the Afghan people.

- The U.S. Government has provided over $164 million in aid to Afghanistan thus far since October 1.

- With U.S. support, WFP delivered over 30,000 metric tons of food into Afghanistan in the first half of November, exceeding records for food delivery into the country. The more than 29,000 metric tons that WFP moved in October had been the most food ever moved in a whole month in Afghanistan.

- The U.S. airlifted 20,000 wool blankets, 100 rolls of plastic sheeting, 200 metric tons of High Energy Biscuits, and one metric ton of sugar to Turkmenistan for distribution in Afghanistan.

- The U.S. purchased 15,000 metric tons of wheat in Kazakstan, which is moving by railway to Turkmenabad. The first rail car of wheat arrived on November 23 carrying 1,500 metric tons of wheat.

- The U.S. Department of Defense has airdropped nearly 2 million Humanitarian Daily Rations into Afghanistan. Each ration is enough to sustain a person with a day's worth of calories.

- On November 20, a ship departed Port Lake Charles, Louisiana with 10,000 metric tons of U.S.-donated food for the people of Afghanistan.

- A shipment of five large USAID-funded medical shipments arrived in Turkmenistan on November 12 for distribution by UNICEF. Each shipment provides basic medical supplies and medicines for 10,000 people for three months. USAID has provided a total of 10 kits for Afghanistan.

- On November 21, 65,000 metric tons of food provided by USAID arrived in Iran for transfer to WFP regional hubs in Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan, Iran, Tajikistan, and Kyrgyzstan for delivery into Afghanistan.

- On November 24, USAID airlifted 350,000 wheat bags to Turkmenabad for WFP to use to package and distribute WFP wheat supplies.

- USAID airlifted 1,000 rolls of plastic sheeting to Turkmenistan for emergency shelter use in Afghanistan.

- USAID transported 20,400 blankets from its stockpiles on October 23, and an additional 15,000 blankets on October 25, to Pakistan for the UN High Commissioner for Refugees to use in the event of a refugee influx.

Nicely done, as always. thx. Pls. make sure McCallam circles back with you after he receives the information he expects. Depending on how hard they push indemnity, we may want to pivot and support a limit on liability for the contractors as well....as a last resort. Th group should discuss at our next meeting (perhaps tomorrow). We also have a new (as of tonight) package of tax incentives that the Governor has submitted for our consideration.

Subject: NYC Liability Limitation in Aviation Security Act

This email responds to Bridgeland's request for more information regarding liability limitations for NYC in the Aviation Security Act. In short, there is indeed such a limitation, but it protects only NYC and does not operate, in the view of WHCO or Robert McCallum of the Civil Division, to solve the problem of the lack of indemnification for the contractors.

In particular, the Aviation and Transporation Security Act includes the

" LIMITATIONS ON LIABILITY FOR NEW YORK CITY- Liability for all claims, whether for compensatory or punitive damages or for contribution or indemnity arising from the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, against the City of New York shall not exceed the greater of the city's insurance coverage or $350,000,000. If a claimant who is eligible to seek compensation under section 405 of this Act, submits a claim under section 405, the claimant waives the right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any Federal or State court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, including any such action against the City of New York. The preceding sentence does not apply to a civil action to recover collateral source obligations."

The Conference Report has this to say about the meaning of the provision:

"The Conference substitute also limits the liability for all claims arising from the terrorist-related attacks of September 11, 2001, brought against the City of New York to the greater of the City's insurance coverage or $350,000,000. This limitation on damages against the City of New York, however, does not apply to any non-government or private entity that is contracted with the City."

In other words, the statutory limitation does not extend to contractors and the like who might argue they are agents of New York.

As to anecdotal legislative history, Liz Dougherty of DPC recalls that it was Don Young (not McCain) who inserted the language in an effort to garner support for the bill from the New York delegation. (In fact, McCain complained on the floor about the inclusion of these provisions as evidence of unfair interest group influence). Don Marsh of Legislative Affairs is going to find out more from Young's staff as to the intended purpose of the provision, how it wound up in the bill, and at whose behest, et cetera.

As to the scope of the statutory liability limitation for NYC, WHCO is of the view that one can advance arguments for either broad and narrow interpretations based on the meaning of the phrase "arising from." That is, it is not clear from the face of the statute or the legislative history whether the liability limitation is only for claims directly and immediately related to the attacks (e.g., wrongful death claims for persons trapped in the building) or whether it extends to claims for injury that occurred a few steps down the causal chain (e.g. a personal injury claim for an accident during debris removal, months after the attack).

Even on a broad reading of "claims arising from" the attacks, however, the provision only provides protection to NYC and does nothing for the contractors. For instance, if a third party sued the contractors for damages caused by an accident during the cleanup and the contractors in turn sued NYC for indemnification, NYC would be protected against that claim up to the statutory limit but the contractors would be on the hook for all damages that might be awarded.

Accordingly, I do not view the instant provision as solving the contractual issue at hand. I got the impression from Austin this morning that NYC somehow thought this provision fixed everything, but my conclusion is that it does not. To repeat, it fixes things from NYC's particular standpoint of liability, but it does not solve the larger problem of the contractors' liability on the site and the fact that NYC has not indemnified them for potential claims arising out of their work or secured insurance for such indemnification.

Also, you may be interested to know that Pataki is now pushing for a similar liability limitation for the State of New York. He is working with DeLay's office on language now. The solution for the contractor situation (if indeed it remains a live "emergency") is to fashion a like limitation for the debris removal contractors, and perhaps even for other contractors at the site. As we have noted all along, that is, although not ideal, preferable to a federal indemnification of NYC or the State.

Finally, the latest update from McCallum is excerpted below for your information:

"My last conversations were last Tues. with the attny for the contractors who continued to stress the ability of the federal gov't to provide an indemnity . . . . I told him and the folks in NY that I would be back in touch with them this week once we had gotten from Ernst &Young the insurance analysis and once we had gotten info on the insurance coverages and efforts from Willis, neither of which we have received."

That's it for now.

I have an important conference call on the PLA litigation that was scheduled, after coordinating the schedules of about 10 people, for 4pm today. I don't have any items to present to the WHJSC so, if it's all right with the Chairs, I will participate in the call and see you all next week.

Subject: Terrorism insurance

As you can see from the enclosed coalition letter that was sent to the President, there is a very broad and deep coalition that is concerned about this issue that is working hard to get it enacted.

The Chamber and the Coalition have been extremely active in our efforts to pass the terrorism insurance legislation with reasonable liability provisions that treat all businesses equally, with more activity planned right up to the House vote and for the Senate.

Along with a substantial number of House and Senate visits, CEO calls and grass-roots activity, the Chamber and the Coalition have also:

sent the enclosed coalition letter to the White House;
sent the enclosed letter to House GOP leadership and relevant Committee Chairs; undertaken a heavy print, TV and radio ad buy (copies available on the enclosed link: http://www.litigationfairness.org/);
sent the enclosed GAIN piece to more than 45,000 Chamber activists across the country; sent the enclosed Action Alert to almost 4000 Chambers and Associations; and will send up the enclosed Key Vote letter to the House tomorrow.

In addition, we are circulating another Coalition letter for Thursday, and we are collecting all of the letters sent up by other companies and trade associations, which will be compiled into a packet for distribution to the House.

If you have any questions, or if there are other activities that could be helpful, please don't hesitate to give me a call.

Thanks!

October 25, 2001

The Honorable George W. Bush
President of the United States
The White House
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mr. President:

The terrorists who attacked our nation September 11 deliberately struck at the center of U.S. finance and commerce. While the attacks were devastating in many ways, we have absolutely no doubt that our nation will recover and move forward, unbowed and ever-stronger. We have great faith in our national leaders, our economic system, and in the millions of individual workers who comprise American business.

However, the attacks have left an important mark on an industry that underpins all sectors of the U.S. economy: insurance. In short, the possibility of additional terrorist attacks has made insurance against such risks virtually unobtainable.

Our market-driven economy is predicated on risk. Insurers provide much-needed security. Without insurance, financiers cannot lend, and companies are reluctant to invest. Without insurance, new construction would cease. All types of cargo would be stuck in place. Some businesses may choose to cease operations after determining that the risks of continuing to operate in the current environment without the ability to share potential losses is too great. In addition, the potential benefits of the Administration's economic stimulus package could be greatly muted.

Fortunately, the insurance market failure can be averted through federal action. To that end, we urge you to consider immediate enactment of legislation to stabilize the insurance market by creating a federal backstop for terrorism insurance coverage. Other countries that live with the constant threat of terrorism have successfully established such mechanisms.

The terrorists who attacked America on September 11 cannot be allowed to hobble the U.S. economy. We strongly urge the Administration and Congress to quickly enact the insurance legislation needed to keep the wheels of American commerce turning without interruption.

November 16, 2001

To [Members of the House Republican Leadership as well as Chairmen Sensenbrenner, Thomas, Oxley & Dreier – Personalized]:

I am writing on behalf of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the world's largest business federation, representing more than three million businesses and organizations of every size, sector, and region, to urge you to pass legislation that will provide an appropriate federal financial backstop to ensure that insurance coverage is available to cover future financial losses associated with terrorism. It is vital that such legislation be enacted into law before the end of this Congressional session.

In addition to the unfathomable personal impact on families and individuals, the tragic events of September 11th have had a substantially negative economic effect. As our nation continues with its recovery and war efforts, it is critical that American businesses be certain that the economic consequences of any future terrorist attacks will not cripple them beyond the point of recovery. Because of the unprecedented scope and nature of the losses sustained in September, terrorism has now become virtually uninsurable in the private marketplace. If terrorism insurance becomes unavailable, our entire economy stands to experience deep, widespread and negative ripple effects. The Chamber also recognizes that there are a number of ways in which this issue can be addressed, including H.R. 3210, the "Terrorism Risk Protection Act."

In addition, personal injury lawyers who seek to exploit the events of September 11th or any future terrorist attacks will likely hamper our nation's economic recovery, enriching themselves at our nation's expense. Acts of terrorism must not become a bonus for personal injury lawyers. Those who are truly injured or damaged by an act of terrorism should receive fair and fast compensation—but not a windfall. Accordingly, we support reasonable limits on the liability of non-terrorists for damages caused by an act of terrorism.

We are concerned, however, that the version of H.R. 3210, reported out of the Financial Services Committee would not treat all potential business litigants equally in the area of liability rules. The U.S. Chamber believes that any solution to the problem of liability resulting from acts of terrorism should subject all parties (other than terrorists) to the same liability rules, and not favor one group of litigants over another.

It is critical that Congress quickly pass a terrorism insurance plan that will facilitate the availability of appropriate insurance mechanisms to cover terrorism-related events. If such a backstop is not created soon, our nation's economic recovery will be severely jeopardized. Because of the importance of making sure that insurance coverage for future acts of terrorism is available, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce strongly urges you to quickly pass legislation that would provide an appropriate federal backstop for terrorism insurance and treats all businesses equally in the area of liability.

Sincerely,

R. Bruce Josten

ACTION CALL!

GAIN
GRASSROOTS ACTION INFORMATION NETWORK
U.S. Chamber of Commerce

U.S. HOUSE TO VOTE ON TERRORISM INSURANCE

CALL YOUR REPRESENTATIVE TO ASK FOR THEIR SUPPORT

The U.S. House of Representatives will vote on terrorism insurance legislation this Thursday, November 29th. H.R. 3210, the "Terrorism Risk Protection Act," will limit liability and discourage trial lawyers from cashing in on future terrorist acts by blaming and suing businesses for acts they have no control over.

Thousands of companies across the nation are already beginning to receive notices indicating that insurance coverage for future acts will be cancelled. Without this important legislation, by the end of the year, the majority of American businesses will lose their insurance protection against acts of terrorism, putting them in jeopardy and millions of jobs at risk.

IMMEDIATE ACTION NEEDED: Call or write your representative today and ask them to support H.R. 3210, the "Terrorism Risk Protection Act."

- To call, use the GAIN Legislative Hotline at 1-888-832-GAIN (4246)
- To fax, go to GAIN Online at www.uschamber.policy.net

Background: Without adequate terrorism insurance, businesses and industries will face significantly higher financial & transportation costs. For example:

- Banks cannot lend money for new construction or the purchase of real estate unless borrowers have adequate insurance;
- Borrowers may be considered in default on their existing loans, since lenders often require insurance as a condition of the loan;
- Stadiums and arenas may be forced to no longer feature sporting or entertainment events;
- Shopping malls, factories, power plants, pipelines and skyscrapers could be put out of business;
- Trucking firms, railroads, airlines and ships may be unable to transport many types of cargo or required to limit their destinations.

Any legislation must also include reasonable limits on liability for non-terrorist victims. Liability limits are needed so that businesses won't be sued for terrorist attacks and so that taxpayers won't be subsidizing trial lawyers excesses. Terrorism legislation should provide reasonable legal procedures that would:

- Ensure that victims can quickly recover real losses;
- Protect the taxpayer from spurious claims;
- Prevent unnecessary bankruptcies; and
- Reduce the likelihood that future terrorist attacks will significantly burden the U.S. economy.

A federal backstop for terrorism insurance is not just about helping insurance companies; it's about preventing a widespread credit crunch that jeopardizes thousands of diverse industries of all sizes and millions of workers.

If you would prefer to receive future alerts and updates via e-mail, please visit www.uschamber.policy.net to register.

Immediate Action Needed: Terrorism Reinsurance Availability

The underlying weakness of the U.S. economy, now in a recession, will only deteriorate if Congress doesn't act immediately to head off a collapse of insurance markets insuring against risk, notably from acts of terrorism.

We are requesting that you contact your member companies immediately to alert them to the urgent need for Congress to act.

In the aftermath of the September 11th terrorist attacks, commercial property / casualty insurance disruptions, cancellations and significantly increased premium costs on business will result, unless Congress acts as President Bush has requested.

What's at issue: Reinsurance companies cover the excess of risk for insurance companies helping to spread the risk of losses beyond a single company. Reinsurance companies, the majority of which renew reinsurance contracts in January have notified Property & Casualty Insurers that policies will no longer provide coverage for acts of terrorism. That means your member companies' primary insurers will be forced to exclude acts of terrorism from coverage or raise insurance premiums dramatically.

Why Important: Unless Congress acts, all companies will confront drastically higher insurance premiums, and will face a lack of complete insurance coverage. This, in turn, will result in a potential credit shortage as lenders who require insurance coverage for commercial loans will see their collateral inadequately covered and will raise rates to compensate for that additional risk. Additionally, since similar insurance requirements exist on all major modes of transportation, much higher shipping costs will be imposed on business as well.

Action Needed: President Bush has called on Congress to enact legislation that will allow the Federal government to provide a temporary backstop until the private insurance market develops the ability and capacity to insure against terrorist acts. Such legislation must also provide reasonable legal protections for businesses from lawsuits resulting from harms any future terrorist attacks may cause. These legal protections include: having cases heard in neutral federal courts (keep cases out of trial-lawyer friendly state courts); no punitive damages; no joint liability ("deep pockets") for non-economic damages ("pain and suffering"); and no double recoveries. These legal remedies for injured parties exist for fault-based acts. Acts of terrorism are not the fault of insurers anymore than they are the fault of your member companies.

What YOU need to do: Immediately notify your member companies of this urgent situation and strongly encourage them to contact their members of Congress to call on the Congressional leadership to quickly move terrorism insurance legislation, with appropriate legal protections, to the floor for a vote immediately. The House of Representatives is voting Thursday (Nov.29th) so immediate action is needed. Lack of insurance for terrorist acts will jeopardize economic recovery.

Enclosed is a copy of the U.S. Chamber's "Key Vote" alert sent to members of the House of Representatives.

November 28, 2001

~~Terrorism insurance key vote letter to full house~~TO MEMBERS OF THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

I am writing on behalf of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the world's largest business federation, representing more than three million businesses of every size, sector and region, to strongly urge you to support H.R. 3210, the terrorism insurance legislation. It is ~~IMPERATIVE~~ imperative that Congress, before going out of session this year, pass legislation that provides for ~~this~~ an appropriate federal financial backstop for terrorism insurance~~legislation before going out of session this year~~. If Congress does not pass this vital legislation, the vast majority of businesses will lose the opportunity to obtain insurance against terrorist attacks before Ceongress returns next year.

If businesses are unable to obtain insurance to cover losses caused by future acts of terror~~for terrorist acts~~, they ~~would~~ will not only potentially be directly liable for the ~~possibly billions of dollars of~~significant damages that terrorists may cause, but they will also face significantly higher financing and other costs~~,~~. This could potentially ~~wiping~~ wipe out the beneficial impact of ~~the~~ any economic stimulus legislation. It is important to note that H.R. 3210 ~~This is NOT~~is not a "bailout" for the insurance industry, ~~but represents the~~ but stands as an appropriate federal financial backstop to help ensure that insurance coverage is available to cover future financial losses associated with terrorist attacks.~~ONLY way that small businesses will be able to obtain insurance for future terrorist acts.~~ If appropriate ~~this legislation~~terrorism insurance legislation is not enacted, ~~insurance companies will simply stop selling insurance for terrorist acts. The ones who suffer as a result will be~~ businesses will be~~that are~~ faced with the Hobson's Choice of either having to ~~forced to~~ pay exorbitant rates for terrorism insurance that will be difficult or even impossible to locate, or ~~are~~ forced to do without ~~insurance~~, resulting in higher costs for financing, potential loan defaults and extreme risk to their employees.

It is also important to include in H.R. 3210 reasonable limits on the liability of non-terrorists for damages caused by an act of terrorism and that treat all businesses equally. Those trial lawyers who seek to exploit the events of September 11th or any future terrorist attacks will likely hamper our nation's economic recovery, enriching themselves at our nation's expense. Acts of terrorism must not become a bonus for personal injury lawyers, especially at a significant cost to the U.S. Treasury. Those who are truly injured or damaged by an act of terrorism should receive fair and fast compensation—but not a windfall. Without appropriate liability limits, future victims of terrorist attacks will be forced into a race to the courthouse in order to make sure that they are one of the lucky plaintiffs that happens to receive a damage award made at the expense of the other victims and subsidized by the government.

~~Finally, it is important, for fairness reasons, that this legislation include limits on liability for acts of terrorism. First of all, it is unfair to the victims of intentional, criminal, terrorist acts, including the business victims, that they could actually be sued for unlimited punitive damages, and that they could find themselves liable for 100% of the damages, even if they were only .001% responsible and the terrorists were 99.99%~~

~~responsible. Second, without limits on punitive damages, for example, a terrorist act could generate a "race to the court-house" as plaintiffs lawyers seek to obtain massive punitive damages before many victims even have a chance to file their claim. Such awards would not only wipe out significant portions of the backstop, forcing the federal government to in effect pay a wind-fall to a few lucky plaintiffs, but would award some plaintiffs at the expense of all of the rest of the victims. Victims should have the ability to recover compensation quickly and fairly, but exorbitant recoveries should not preclude other victims from receiving compensation, either.~~

Therefore, we strongly urge you to support the rule governing debate on ~~this legislation~~H.R. 3210, support final passage and to oppose any ~~weakening amendments~~motions to recommit, instruct or otherwise weaken the bill. The Chamber will strongly consider including votes on or in relation to H.R. 3210 as a key vote in its annual "How They Voted" ratings for 2001.

~~The U.S. Chamber may use this vote and any related votes in our annual "How They Voted" guide to Congress.~~

Sincerely,

R. Bruce Josten ~~(TOM?)~~

We respond within 20 days in a bare-bones "answer"; then there likely will be cross-motions for summary judgment, which means briefs are submitted by both sides. Then judge has oral argument. Probable district court resolution in spring.
Note that there are about 30,000 Reagan documents that may be released immediately this week; these are not part of the 68,000, but are still important and will help us a lot (and no one is expecting this release). I will talk to you more about that tomorrow, but we have a good chance to gain higher p.r. ground with this release. DO NOT FORESHADOW THIS WITH PRESS YET.

Suit Filed to Reverse Presidential Papers Order (Reuters)
By Deborah Charles
Reuters, November 29, 2001
WASHINGTON (Reuters) - A government watchdog group filed suit in federal court on Wednesday to overturn an executive order issued by President Bush that lets presidents block the release of a former president's papers.
Public Citizen, a consumer advocacy group, filed suit in Washington on behalf of several historical associations, a nonprofit group dedicated to publishing declassified documents, a reporters' group and two presidential historians.
``The suit seeks to compel the National Archives to abide by the terms of the Presidential Records Act and to release to the public some 68,000 pages of records of former President Ronald Reagan, which should have been released last January, 12 years after President Reagan left office,'' Public Citizen said.
Earlier this month, Bush issued an executive order allowing either an incumbent or a former president to block the release of a former president's papers.
The order, which alarmed historians, would require applicants to show a ``specific'' need for many types of presidential records.
It would also give Bush control over access to Reagan's papers, including any involving members of Reagan's Republican administration who now work for Bush.
``Bush's executive order violates not only the spirit but the letter of the law,'' said Public Citizen President Joan Claybrook.
``We will not stand by while the administration tramples on the people's right to find out about their own government. The president should not have the ability to arbitrarily withhold public information to hide wrongdoing or avoid embarrassment.''
Under the Presidential Records Act, passed in 1978 in response to disputes over the records of former President Richard Nixon, the records of presidents and vice presidents are public property and the National Archives must make them available to the public after a president leaves office.
Former presidents and vice presidents can restrict access to some categories of records, including confidential communication with their advisers, for up to 12 years. After that the materials must be made public except for classified documents that could damage national security.
The 12-year restriction on Reagan's presidential documents expired this year.
Although Reagan issued a broad order in 1989 governing the release of his documents, the White House began drafting its own order after receiving a request for a large volume of documents. Bush's executive order gives a former president 90 days to decide on all but ``unduly burdensome'' requests. The incumbent president is to decide whether to concur and is to defer to the wishes of a former president unless there are ``compelling circumstances.''
The White House said those circumstances could include current national security issues a former president might be unaware of. ``In effect the executive order makes the release of records dependent on the good graces of the former president,'' said Public Citizen attorney Scott Nelson.

``The whole point of the Presidential Records Act was to take control of access out of the hands of the former presidents,'' he said. ``By giving the presidents back the power to cover up inconvenient demands, the executive order has inevitably made people wonder what they may be trying to hide.'' Nelson said the government had 60 days to respond and he expected briefs to be presented in U.S. District court early in 2002.

Records Order Spurs Lawsuit (WPost)

Groups Oppose Bush Limit on Access to Presidential Papers

By Bill Miller

The Washington Post, November 29, 2001

Historians and public interest groups filed a lawsuit yesterday asking a federal judge to strike down an executive order signed by President Bush that restricts access to presidential records, arguing that the action illegally promotes secrecy.

The suit filed in U.S. District Court here accuses the Bush administration of violating the 1978 Presidential Records Act, maintaining the law was meant to limit presidential control over records and promote public access to papers and other materials after presidents leave office.

"We will not stand by while the administration tramples on the people's right to find out about their own government," said Joan Claybrook, president of Public Citizen, a watchdog group that joined in the suit. "The president should not have the ability to arbitrarily withhold public information to hide wrongdoing or avoid embarrassment."

Other plaintiffs include the American Historical Association, the National Security Archive, the Organization of American Historians, the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, and presidential historians Hugh Davis Graham and Stanley I. Kutler.

White House spokeswoman Anne Womack said Bush's order is "sound law and sound policy" and backed by a 1977 Supreme Court ruling that former presidents can continue to assert various constitutional privileges for their records.

Susan Cooper, spokeswoman for the National Archives, said officials there would not comment on pending litigation. As keeper of the records, the National Archives was named as a defendant.

Under Bush's order, a former president or a sitting president -- or in some cases, the family of a deceased or disabled president -- could block the release of records requested by individuals and force them to go to court to challenge the decisions.

Passed in the wake of a controversy over the papers and tapes of former president Richard M. Nixon, the Presidential Records Act of 1978 declared that the records of presidents and vice presidents are public property. The law called for the archivist of the United States to make them available to the public "as rapidly and completely as possible."

The act envisioned the release of most sensitive records, such as those involving confidential communications between presidents and their advisers, 12 years after a president left office. There were exceptions for national security matters.

Until Bush's order was signed Nov. 1, a former president could claim privilege for particular documents, but the archivist could overrule him, and the former president would have to go to court to sustain his claim. Bush's order shifts the legal burden, requiring individuals to show a "demonstrated, specific need" for particular records to overcome constitutionally raised privileges by former and incumbent presidents.

Scott L. Nelson, a lawyer for the Public Citizen Litigation Group, said the order could prevent or delay the release of important materials, including 68,000 pages of records of former president Ronald Reagan that historians hoped to obtain earlier this year. He said records could remain off limits even if the privileges raised were unfounded.

The lawsuit, assigned to Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly, also seeks a court order requiring the release of the Reagan-era papers.

Nelson said the executive order also gave former vice presidents additional control over their records and noted that Bush's father, former president George Bush, could be the first to benefit because scholars want his papers from the Reagan administration, when he was vice president.

In Case You Missed It

- On November 27, the International Organization for Migration -- with USAID funding – sent a 30-truck convoy of winter clothing and blankets from the Turkmenistan/Afghanistan to the Afghan city of Andkhoi.

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- "...senior officials of the Taliban regime, including two ministers, visited Kabul's famous museum. They arrived with a team of men carrying sledgehammers, then stood around in transports of delight as Afghanistan's cultural history was reduced to rubble. After three days they repaired to the Ministry of Culture where, over three months, they meted out the same treatment to the priceless antiquities stored in the basement." (Peter Popham; The Independent, 11/29/01)

- "Fleeing Taliban plundered Afghanistan's national bank of millions of dollars in cash...during their hurried retreat from Kabul. Its Taliban governor, Haji Mullah Mohammad Ahmadi, showed up with a posse of gunmen on 12 November, and took $6 million..." (The Daily Mail [U.K.], 11/29/01)

Message

- The global coalition against terrorism grows stronger every day – every day al-Qaida is becoming more and more isolated.

- Our military forces, the forces of our allies, and many Afghans seeking a better future are liberating Afghanistan. The Afghan people are celebrating. The Taliban and the terrorists are on the run. And we are dismantling the terrorist network in Afghanistan, piece by piece.

- The structure of post-Taliban Afghanistan will be for the Afghan people to determine. But we will provide strong diplomatic and economic support to the aspirations of Afghan parties committed to an inclusive, democratic political structure, committed to the welfare of all Afghan men and women, and providing substantial local autonomy. This is a structure in which all Afghan ethnic groups can participate and find their rightful place.

- Our enemies are devious and ruthless. They have no conscience, no religion, and no mercy. They seek to kill our citizens and overthrow friendly governments. But we are seeking them. We are finding them. And we are fighting them.

- We fight the terrorists – and all those who give them aid. America has a message for the nations of the world: If you harbor a terrorist, you are a terrorist. If you feed a terrorist or fund a terrorist, you are a terrorist. And you will be held accountable.

Facts of the Day

- The Department of Defense is approaching the two million mark in Humanitarian Daily Rations airdropped into Afghanistan. Since the war began, more than 1,970,000 HDRs have been airdropped.

- To help deal with the difficulty of delivering aid in winter, the World Food Program – with U.S. funding – has 50 heavy-duty trucks, some fitted with snow plows, in Turkmenistan ready to deliver food into Afghanistan's Central Highlands.

In Case You Missed It

- On November 27, the International Organization for Migration -- with USAID funding – sent a 30-truck convoy of winter clothing and blankets from the Turkmenistan/Afghanistan to the Afghan city of Andkhoi.

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- "...senior officials of the Taliban regime, including two ministers, visited Kabul's famous museum. They arrived with a team of men carrying sledgehammers, then stood around in transports of delight as Afghanistan's cultural history was reduced to rubble. After three days they repaired to the Ministry of Culture where, over three months, they meted out the same treatment to the priceless antiquities stored in the basement." (Peter Popham; The Independent, 11/29/01)

- "Fleeing Taliban plundered Afghanistan's national bank of millions of dollars in cash...during their hurried retreat from Kabul. Its Taliban governor, Haji Mullah Mohammad Ahmadi, showed up with a posse of gunmen on 12 November, and took $6 million..." (The Daily Mail [U.K.], 11/29/01)

Message

- The global coalition against terrorism grows stronger every day – every day al-Qaida is becoming more and more isolated.

- Our military forces, the forces of our allies, and many Afghans seeking a better future are liberating Afghanistan. The Afghan people are celebrating. The Taliban and the terrorists are on the run. And we are dismantling the terrorist network in Afghanistan, piece by piece.

- The structure of post-Taliban Afghanistan will be for the Afghan people to determine. But we will provide strong diplomatic and economic support to the aspirations of Afghan parties committed to an inclusive, democratic political structure, committed to the welfare of all Afghan men and women, and providing substantial local autonomy. This is a structure in which all Afghan ethnic groups can participate and find their rightful place.

- Our enemies are devious and ruthless. They have no conscience, no religion, and no mercy. They seek to kill our citizens and overthrow friendly governments. But we are seeking them. We are finding them. And we are fighting them.

- We fight the terrorists – and all those who give them aid. America has a message for the nations of the world: If you harbor a terrorist, you are a terrorist. If you feed a terrorist or fund a terrorist, you are a terrorist. And you will be held accountable.

Facts of the Day

- The Department of Defense is approaching the two million mark in Humanitarian Daily Rations airdropped into Afghanistan. Since the war began, more than 1,970,000 HDRs have been airdropped.

- To help deal with the difficulty of delivering aid in winter, the World Food Program – with U.S. funding – has 50 heavy-duty trucks, some fitted with snow plows, in Turkmenistan ready to deliver food into Afghanistan's Central Highlands.

While as a lobbyist, I should take full credit, this was a good team victory. Thanks to all.

AGENCY FOIA REQUESTS

HHS

- 9/11 Medical Records Anticipating a large volume of requests from attorneys and others seeking medical records prepared by PHS emergency medical personnel in connection with recent events, OGC and the Office of Emergency Preparedness drafted standard language for responding. Requesters will be advised to follow applicable FOI and Privacy Act procedures for seeking government records

- NIH Judicial Watch contacted NIH seeking documents regarding an October 23 meeting between NIH's Dr. Anthony Fauci and the Secretary in which the anthrax crisis was discussed.

- Associated Press, Washington, D.C., has requested that CDC provide copies of all contracts of $25,000 or more awarded by the Agency from September 12 through November 9, 2001, on a no-bid or non-competitive basis.

- USA TODAY has requested that CDC provide all EPI-AID request forms and trip reports for the New York, Washington D.C., New Jersey and Florida anthrax investigations (and any other anthrax investigations). In addition, they have requested all information relative to any CDC World Series assignments in Arizona and New York.

- CMS On November 14 Senator Harkin requested that CMS provide electronic access to current demographic data regarding Medicare-eligible Iowans, with monthly electronic updates to ensure accuracy of records.

- Anthrax Judicial Watch requested from FDA any records related to Bioport Corp. and anthrax vaccine, and communications concerning its use during the Gulf War.

- Office of International Affairs. The request is for all deliberations and drafting that contributed to the finalized letter sent to Dr. Hogerzeil, of the World Health Organization (WHO), regarding the WHO's proposed changes to their Essential Drugs List review process.

COMMERCE

- Received 11/26/01 from Joseph W. Dorn and Duane W. Layton of King & Spalding, requesting a copy of the Secretary's report to the President concerning the Secretary's findings and recommendations resulting from the investigation under Section 232 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962. The Section 232 investigation determined the effects on U.S. national security of imports of iron ore and semi-finished steel.

- Received 11/21/01 from Michael Ravnitzky of American Lawyer Media, requesting membership and participant lists for the Interagency Working Group on Technology Transfer (IWGTT) as well as agendas, minutes, and handouts for all meetings of the IWGTT from 1992 to present.

- Received 11/21/01 from Christopher J. Farrell of Judicial Watch, requesting all information relating to: (1) the decision to settle with McDonnell Douglass on charges that the company violated U.S. export laws by selling aerospace machine tools to a Chinese company; (2) communications concerning the decision to drop the criminal charges filed against McDonnell Douglass; (3) communications concerning the decision to set the civil penalty for McDonnell Douglass at $2.1 million; (4) communications concerning the decision to preserve the right of McDonnell Douglass to conduct business overseas as part of the settlement; (5) the sale of $5.4 million in machine equipment to the China National Aero-Technology Import and Export Corporation; and (6) communications concerning the decision to require McDonnell Douglass' parent company, the Boeing Company, to assume responsibility and liability for all exports under DOC's jurisdiction made or to be made by McDonnell Douglass.

- Received 11/15/01 from Gabrielle Herderschee-Hunter of the Federal Trade Commission's FTC Watch, requesting Microsoft Corporation Contracts.

JUSTICE

- Mark Benjamin, of United Press International, has requested all correspondence between the Department and members of Congress since September 11 regarding the following: 1) recent Department policy allowing the government to monitor communications between suspects and their attorneys; 2) information on individuals detained in the government's investigation of the attacks; 3) the administration's decision to possibly establish military tribunals to try terrorist suspects; and, 4) the subject of civil liberties.

- Christopher Farrell, of Judicial Watch, Inc., has requested all records pertaining to the decision to settle with McDonnell Douglas on charges that the company "violated US export laws by selling to a Chinese-run company aerospace machine tools that ultimately wound up in a Chinese military plant."

- Erica Miller, of the Chemical and Biological Arms Control Institute, has requested a document entitled, "Attorney General's Five-Year Interagency Counterterrorism and Technology Crime Plan."

DOT

- Judicial Watch. Records relating to: (1) communications between former FAA Deputy Administrator Linda Daschle and former DOT Inspector General Mary Schiavo regarding criminal-record checks for all airline employees, as cited in the Miami Herald; (2) a meeting between Ms. Daschle and L-3 Communications or InVision Technologies Inc.; (3) the number of "eXaminer" airline luggage bomb-detection devices, manufactured by L-3

Communications, currently in use at airports in the U.S.; (4) the number of "CTX" airline luggage bomb-detection devices, manufactured by InVision Technologies Inc., currently in use at airports in the U.S.; (5) the reported breakdowns of "eXaminer" bomb-detection devices at the Dallas/Fort Worth Airport after installation in the spring of 2000; (6) the number of breakdowns the "eXaminer" bomb-detection devices experience; (7) the number of breakdowns the "CTX" bomb-detection devices experience; (8) FAA's certification of L-3 Communications' "eXaminer" as an FAA approved bomb-scanner; and (9) the decision to mandate the purchase of an "eXaminer" bomb-scanner for every "CTX" bomb-scanner purchased by the FAA.

EPA

- During the week of November 20-26, 2001, the Agency received a total of 177 FOIA requests. Of that total, 35 were received in Headquarters. Significant FOIA requests included: New York Public Interest Research Group is asking for all records and documents between EPA and any representative of the General Electric Company from September 7, 2001 to the present regarding the Hudson River PCB Superfund Site.

You are too modest! Brian, I have always had tremendous respect for the
with all its difficulties -- has boosted my opinion 1000%. Great job.

Sheila

In Case You Missed It…

- On November 30th, the Department of Defense dropped enough Humanitarian Daily Rations into Afghanistan to push its total HDRs dropped to 2,005,620. The total cost of this unprecedented humanitarian aid effort is more than $44 million and U.S. military aircraft will continue dropping HDRs each night.

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- "The predominantly male delegation at the Afghan peace talks in Bonn yesterday agreed to a package securing the rights of women to an education, work and a role in politics." (Ewen MacAskill; The Guardian [U.K.], 11/30/01)

- "Girls are being allowed to return to formal education in Afghanistan after being excluded from schools since the Taliban took power in 1996…In Nangarhar province in eastern Afghanistan, 3500 girls have registered for classes and 320 women teachers have returned to work, says Abdul Ghani Hidayat, director of education in the post-Taliban provincial administration." (The Daily Express [U.K.], 11/30/01)

- "'They've mixed traditions with Islam and their own misinterpretation of it, and then imposed it on the Afghan people in the name of Islam'…[Jalal] Jalalizadeh [Iranian lawmakers, Sunni with a doctorate in Islamic studies] grew agitated as he reached the parts [of the Taliban rule book] banning children's activities such as kite flying or playing with dolls. 'This makes no sense…'" (Soraya Sarhaddi Nelson; Los Angeles Times, 11/30/01)

Message

- The global coalition against terrorism grows stronger every day – every day al-Qaeda is becoming more and more isolated.

- Our military forces, the forces of our allies, and many Afghans seeking a better future are liberating Afghanistan. The Afghan people are celebrating. The Taliban and the terrorists are on the run. And we are dismantling the terrorist network in Afghanistan, piece by piece.

- The structure of post-Taliban Afghanistan will be for the Afghan people to determine. But we will provide strong diplomatic and economic support to the aspirations of Afghan parties committed to an inclusive, democratic political structure, committed to the welfare of all Afghan men and women, and providing substantial local autonomy. This is a structure in which all Afghan ethnic groups can participate and find their rightful place.

- Our enemies are devious and ruthless. They have no conscience, no religion, and no mercy. They seek to kill our citizens and overthrow friendly governments. But we are seeking them. We are finding them. And we are fighting them.

Facts of the Day

- Tajikistan has changed its rules governing access to international crossing points into Afghanistan to make it easier for humanitarian aid workers and vehicles to make crossings. This will increase the volume of U.S. assistance and the speed with which it gets to needy Afghans.

- The World Food Program – with U.S. assistance – has already distributeded 33,000 metric tons of food aid out of the 51,000 metric tons it is estimated are required for the region over the next three months.

- The total amount of money spent by the U.S. government on humanitarian aid to Afghanistan in FY01 and 02, to date, is $344,738,658.

Weekend Schedule (EST)

Sunday

9:00a EST	Secretary Powell to appear on Face the Nation.
10:30a EST	Secretary Rumsfeld to appear on Meet the Press.
10:30a EST	Attorney General Ashcroft to appear on Fox News Sunday.
11:30a EST	Attorney General Ashcroft to appear on This Week.
12:00p EST	Secretary Powell to appear on Late Edition.

In Case You Missed It…

- On November 30th, the Department of Defense dropped enough Humanitarian Daily Rations into Afghanistan to push its total HDRs dropped to 2,005,620. The total cost of this unprecedented humanitarian aid effort is more than $44 million and U.S. military aircraft will continue dropping HDRs each night.

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- "The predominantly male delegation at the Afghan peace talks in Bonn yesterday agreed to a package securing the rights of women to an education, work and a role in politics." (Ewen MacAskill; The Guardian [U.K.], 11/30/01)

- "Girls are being allowed to return to formal education in Afghanistan after being excluded from schools since the Taliban took power in 1996…In Nangarhar province in eastern Afghanistan, 3500 girls have registered for classes and 320 women teachers have returned to work, says Abdul Ghani Hidayat, director of education in the post-Taliban provincial administration." (The Daily Express [U.K.], 11/30/01)

- "'They've mixed traditions with Islam and their own misinterpretation of it, and then imposed it on the Afghan people in the name of Islam'…[Jalal] Jalalizadeh [Iranian lawmakers, Sunni with a doctorate in Islamic studies] grew agitated as he reached the parts [of the Taliban rule book] banning children's activities such as kite flying or playing with dolls. 'This makes no sense…'" (Soraya Sarhaddi Nelson; Los Angeles Times, 11/30/01)

Message

- The global coalition against terrorism grows stronger every day – every day al-Qaeda is becoming more and more isolated.

- Our military forces, the forces of our allies, and many Afghans seeking a better future are liberating Afghanistan. The Afghan people are celebrating. The Taliban and the terrorists are on the run. And we are dismantling the terrorist network in Afghanistan, piece by piece.

- The structure of post-Taliban Afghanistan will be for the Afghan people to determine. But we will provide strong diplomatic and economic support to the aspirations of Afghan parties committed to an inclusive, democratic political structure, committed to the welfare of all Afghan men and women, and providing substantial local autonomy. This is a structure in which all Afghan ethnic groups can participate and find their rightful place.

- Our enemies are devious and ruthless. They have no conscience, no religion, and no mercy. They seek to kill our citizens and overthrow friendly governments. But we are seeking them. We are finding them. And we are fighting them.

Facts of the Day

- Tajikistan has changed its rules governing access to international crossing points into Afghanistan to make it easier for humanitarian aid workers and vehicles to make crossings. This will increase the volume of U.S. assistance and the speed with which it gets to needy Afghans.

- The World Food Program – with U.S. assistance – has already distributeded 33,000 metric tons of food aid out of the 51,000 metric tons it is estimated are required for the region over the next three months.

- The total amount of money spent by the U.S. government on humanitarian aid to Afghanistan in FY01 and 02, to date, is $344,738,658.

Alex Acosts just left me a message indicating that they would be releasing in OLC opinion on this issue today in a letter under Dan Bryant's name. I assume everyone is aware of this, but forward this information just in case.

thanks. I have FL on the brain (POTUS is going there next week nad KR).
This is for the SC trip, actually -- it's ok, right?

Next, have you thought more about the trip to FL next Friday and Saturday that the FL GOP will pay for and it will be on board Al HOffman's plane?

THE WHITE HOUSE
COALITION INFORMATION CENTER

12/4/2001

Today's Schedule

11:00a EST	President Bush to make remarks in the Rose Garden about terrorist finances.
12:30p EST	State Department daily press briefing with spokesman Richard Boucher.
1:00p EST	Defense Department daily press briefing with Secretary Rumsfeld and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, Gen. Meyers.
3:05p EST	President Bush participates in town hall meeting in Orlando, Florida

In Case You Missed It

- "The U.N. has employed 2,424 Afghan women desperate for work after years of harsh Taliban rule to carry out an urgent food distribution campaign for more than one million people in Kabul. The women and 1,200 men will go door-to-door across the Afghan capital from Sunday in a week-long campaign distributing food coupons to be exchanged for emergency supplies at WFP food depots around the city." (AFP, 12/1/01)

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- A total of 80,000 metric tons of food aid donated by the U.S. government is in the region around Afghanistan and in route to intended beneficiaries. This includes 15,000 metric tons of wheat purchased by USAID/OFDA in Kazakhstan, valued at $6 million, that is currently arriving in warehouses in Turkmenabad. USAID's Office of Food for Peace (USAID/FFP) has provided 65,000 metric tons of wheat, which is being unloaded at Bandar Abbas port in Rian for various World Food Program warehouses in the region.

- "'We [Human Rights Watch] have fairly strong testimony that the Taliban have resorted to human shielding in the last month. That is moving men and equipment to civilian areas, in clear violation of international law,' said [HRW's Sam] Zarifi. An entire village of around 300 Afghans was forced to flee from their homes close to Kandahar city when the Taliban towed their planes to the edge of their village, said Zarifi. They left just in time as U.S. jets promptly moved in to destroy the jets." (AFP, 12/3/01)

Message

- We are pressing the war against terror on every front -- from the mountains of Afghanistan to the bank accounts of terrorist organizations.

- Today we take another important step in the financial fight against terror. From the beginning of the war against terrorism, the President has said that our enemy is every terrorist organization of global reach and all who harbor and support them.

- We began with Al Qaeda. We identified some of its backers – and we moved against their finances. In November, we advanced further, and identified even more global terrorist organizations. And we are moving against their financing as well. The net is closing. And it will close tighter.

- Those who do business with terror will not do business with the United States – or anywhere the United States can reach.

- By shutting these financial networks down, we disrupt the murderers' work.

Facts of the Day

- USAID is providing a $3.5 million grant to International Medical Corps (IMC) for primary health care activities in Bamiyan, Wardak, and Parwan provinces in central Afghanistan. Activities will include emergency primary health care, maternal and child health care, obstetric care, supplementary feeding, and micro-nutrient supplementation.

- To date, the Department of Defense has airdropped 2,160,000 Humanitarian Daily Rations in Afghanistan.

In Case You Missed It

- On December 3, USAID's Office of U.S. Foreign Disaster Assistance provided $3,583,330 to the Cooperative for American Relief Everywhere (CARE) to support initiatives that will provide water and sanitation services, agricultural rehabilitation, and shelter assistance to Afghans in need of humanitarian relief.

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- "Targeting the pocketbooks of terrorists, the Bush Administration froze the assets early Tuesday of an American foundation and two overseas groups accused of financing the militant Palestinian organization HAMAS." (AP, 12/4/01)
- Federal agents locked down the offices of the Holy Land Foundation for Relief and Development in Texas, Illinois, New Jersey, and California, taking custody of relevant business records. The Foundation provides millions of dollars each year to HAMAS. The assets of Beit el-Mal Holdings, an investment company controlled by HAMAS, and Al-Aqsa Islamic Bank, a financial arms of HAMAS substantially owned by Beit el-Mal, were also frozen.
- "U.S. and Canadian officials have agreed to measures tightening border security, including the deployment of 600 U.S. National Guard troops to border crossings and the sharing of computerized fingerprints. The measures – signed by the U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft and Canadian Cabinet ministers on Monday – are aimed at speeding up commerce across the border while strengthening anti-terrorism controls." (AP, 12/4/01)

Message

- The global coalition against terrorism grows stronger every day – every day al-Qaida is becoming more and more isolated.
- The terrorists seek to destroy our freedom and impose its views. We value life, the terrorists ruthlessly destroy it.
- The President has called our military into action to hunt down the members of the al-Qaida organization who murdered innocent Americans. We gave fair warning to the government that harbors them in Afghanistan. The Taliban made a choice to continue hiding terrorists, and now they are paying the price.
- Throughout this battle, we adhere to our values. Unlike our enemy, we respect life. We do not target innocent civilians. We care for the innocent people of Afghanistan, so we continue to provide humanitarian aid, even while their government tries to steal the food we send. When the terrorists and their supporters are gone, the people of Afghanistan will say with the rest of the world: good riddance.
- No group or nation should mistake America's intentions: Where terrorist groups of global reach exist, the United States and our friends and allies will seek it out and destroy them.

Facts of the Day

- Already in FY02, USAID has contributed $98,556,594 in emergency assistance to Afghanistan. To date, the United States Government has provided $177,214,363 in humanitarian assistance to Central Asia in response to the Afghan crisis.
- USAID has also provided an additional $2,000,000 to the U.N.'s World Food Program to support the logistics requirements of its current food aid distribution program. The grant supplements $13.5 million previously granted to WFP's Afghanistan operation for food commodities and food transport equipment.
